Casting backwards that we may see tomorrow, calling on the tangible that we may solve the intangible, reading the immortal that we may understand the transitory, learning life that we may live it better.
DEDICATED

TO THE MEMORY OF

IRVING HEWITT ELIAS
1906 - 1929
MEMBER SENIOR CLASS

WILLIAM ALLEN PLUMMER
1907 - 1929
MEMBER SENIOR CLASS

Who here lived and loved, struggled and achieved, desired and attained, manifesting a spirit that spoke of glory, an ability that promised Greatness, a soul that captured heaven.

- 30 -
In long ago, before our fathers came
To be immersed in petty points of strife:
Ere Folly grew to have so fair a name,
And Honor bowed to save a tyrant's life;
When every nation gloried in distrust,
Desiring only singleness of Fate;
And brothers fell before the sacred lust
That bound their God to sacrilege and Hate:
Strong people looked across the shadowed seas,
In hope of answer to a fading quest;
In search of something Death could not appease,
Or hunger banish from a hungry breast.
The liberty that leads a man to die,
The freedom that a kingdom cannot buy.

They only knew a king had been unjust
A sacred right of choice had been denied;
The words "I will." had come to be
"I must."
Death or dishonor all they might decide. They could not see beyond a quick tomorrow.
But yesterday was burned upon their soul;
And rather than endure it would they borrow
Upon the chance of some idyllic goal.
So to a far off God they made surrender.
Raising their prayers in tumult of desire:
Embracing with the courage that is splendor.
The glory that is Faith's eternal fire.
Young hearts have Hope that only Death will still;
Young hands have strength that only
Love may kill. — Thomas J. Suckr.

A bit of the East and a bit of the West,
And a bit of the blue above;
And a bit of all right to make it tight
With a friendly fellow love.

A bit of the lost and a bit of the won
And a bit of the storm and strife;
A bit of the sun and a bit of the moon,
And a bit of the breath of life.

A bit of a laugh and a bit of a song,
And a bit of the rise and fall;
A bit of the tears and a bit of the fears,
And a bit of God over all.

A bit of the earth and a bit of the sky,
It's a bit I want to see;
For part of my soul is planted there,
At Washington and Lee.

Life

Half-hidden heartaches, tears that will not come;
One happy moment, balancing the sum;
One kiss remembered, that which was the best,
The years like hunters, taking all the rest.
One thrill, one golden deed, and one of brass;
One orchid flower, and all the rest is grass.
One glimpse of glory, blinding us to pain;
Then all recorded, either Loss or Gain.

The Joining of Mind and Matter
Happiness

To dream, to sleep, to never care at all;
To build, to buy, and then to watch it fall.
To love, to lie, to leave it all behind;
To dream, to sleep, to marry with the wind.

</table>
One curse has been removed, but now another
Raises its head to question their demesne;
Dark, shifting shadows, one behind the other,
Come silently and swiftly on the scene.
White nights of waiting follow dawns of gladness,
Each day is painted with the fear of Death:
The silence and the waiting grow to madness.
As every footfall draws a shortened breath.
No beauty dwells within the forest empire,
No freedom stalks the never-silent shore.
No liberty, except the throbbing heart fire
That flickers not, nor sends a pall before.
The dead sleep peacefully beneath their glory.
And History knows their souls have not been sorry.

Finale

Love dies, hope dies, the things of beauty fade;
Alone the ageless soul, aloof and wise,
Leaves to the grave this fading, senseless jade,
Flitting to other lives, and other skies.

—T. J. S.
Organizations
Their God released, their bodies free of danger.
Their homes and hearts content at last to rest:
The spectre comes again, no subtle stranger,
No enemy, nor yet a welcome guest.
Designed upon the impudence of reason,
New patterned in the fashion of the age.
All things are either Loyalty or Treason,
And Freedom writes another bloody page.
Secure beneath the ashes of conception.
The fires of Liberty begin to stir;
Unheeding the man-made divine exception.
That tries to make a Deity of Sir;
Destroying all the Loyalists revere,
Consuming all the kindling wood of Fear.

Resume of Activities

Under the able direction of Professor Marvin G. Bauer, head of the Public Speaking Department and coach of the Washington and Lee teams, the season opened with a Northern trip, which included Princeton and American University. The members of the team making this trip were C. B. Fulton, S. R. Nichols and T. W. Davenport. The Washington and Lee team won from Princeton by a large vote in an audience decision. The American University debate was a non-decision debate on the subject of “Resolved, that higher education be given only to those with special ability.”

An interesting debate on the educational question was held on the home campus with Ohio Wesleyan University, in which W. K. Jennings, S. R. Nichols, and T. W. Davenport participated.

The Colorado College team came to the local campus to discuss the question, “Resolved, that the single standard is practical.” R. C. McDougall, C. B. Fulton and S. R. Nichols supported the negative side of the question for Washington and Lee. The visitors won a judges’ decision by a vote of two to one.

An extensive Southern trip was undertaken in the spring, which included Tennessee, Georgia and Florida. The two questions debated on this trip were: “Resolved, that the United States should have uniform divorce laws.” Those making the trip were D. Sherby, W. K. Jennings and R. O. Morrow.

The season closed with an interesting and entertaining debate with the Harvard Chinese debating team on the question, “Resolved, that the Chinese philosophy of life is more conducive to human happiness than the American philosophy of life.”

Society
Young hearts are quickened to expectant Death.
The flutter of a stifled fear is heard;
Old curses are renewed with softened breath.
And Courage stalks in every whispered word.
Half-hidden in the dusty path of years
The image of an ancient goal is seen.
The glories of an ideal. and the fears Impaled upon the things that might have been.
So gathering to bind themselves in one
To crystallize a vision God foresaw.
To chronicle a drama just begun.
They write it into History and Law.

Strong fingers hold the pen that signs their will;
Strong hearts and hands its passages fulfill.

—Thomas J. Sugrue.

Beauty
The years are wasted that we spend in sleeping,
And wasted are the battles quickly won.
No smile is true that is not born of weeping.
No tie is tightened, if not first undone.
The years of hopeless hoping are the fleetest.
In memories of dreams that have come true:
The victories first lost are always sweetest.
The older fights are better than the new.
True-tempered in the heat of many summers.
Unbending in the winters of despair,
Long silent in the fate of patient mummers.
The last reprise is well-deserved and fair.
There is no joyous tumult at the ending:
Too high the price, with payment ever pending.

— Thomas J. Sauvage.
Features
To Love and Hate are Man's inherent urges,
And quickly interchanging is his heart.
From smiling words to wrath emotion surges.
The closer drawn, the farther torn apart.
So in the history of men and nations,
The cup of brotherhood turns some times sour.
And all of young Democracy's creations
Are swallowed up in one unhappy hour.
There is no glass to tell the hour of turning.
From firm cohesion to a common cause:
We have no better way of ever learning
That Danger's death is Union's menopause.
Brother to brother cries in selfish fear:
Lover to lover turns a heedless ear.

—Thomas J. Sueter.

Perhaps there is a reason in dissension:
Some Gods have petty ways of teaching
Man:
They seem to spurn the thought of intertervention:
Letting their puppets struggle as they can.
Yet why must teaching go beyond the learning.
Reprisal fall upon a beaten foe:
Unbending wrath persist without returning.
Humility be heaped on bitter woe?
The fire is almost out, when from the embers.
A dying flame is nursed to sullen heat:
The pride of blood will not deny its members.
The hearts of gentlemen refuse defeat.
All has been lost, except what is the best:
The Victor bows before the lily crest.

VARSI TY FOOTBALL RESUME, 1929

Under the tutelage of a new coach, and using an entirely new system of play, the Washington and Lee Generals enjoyed only a mediocre season from the standpoint of games won, but the spirit that the team showed, and the fight that the men displayed offset to some degree the matter of lost games.

The Generals started off the season with an overwhelming victory over Lynchburg College, running up a 64 to 6 score. The next Saturday the wearers of the Blue went down to Raleigh, and after trailing N. C. State for a half, came back strong in the third period, and rolled up 27 points to finally win, 27 to 6.

Journeying to Lexington, Ky., the following week, the Blue and White team ran into a pack of fighting Wildcats who defeated the Generals, 20 to 6. Captain Covington, of Kentucky, made several long runs and was instrumental in scoring the three Wildcat touchdowns. The Oberst cohorts scored their only touchdown by means of a long pass from Eberhardt to Williams.

On Oct. 19, the Generals played their annual game with West Virginia in Charleston. The Mountaineers had a powerful team, but the Blue and White warriors fought them from start to finish, and although the final score was 36 to 6 in favor of the West Virginians, the game was a much harder fought one than the score indicated. The only General score was a short pass from Faulkner to Williams.

The Generals next battled the strong Tennessee team in Roanoke, and could not cope with the runs of McEver, Dodd, and Hackman, the Vols winning by a 39 to 0 score. The Blues were unable to stop the great attack of the Tennesseans, and although fighting desperately all the time, were never able to make much progress against their flashy opponents.

V. P. I. was met in Lynchburg on Nov. 2 in a game which finally ended, 36 to 6, in favor of the Gobblers. The opening attack of the Blackburg team seemed to bewilder the Generals, who, however, came back in the second period and displayed a superb brand of football to outscore their opponents in the matter of first downs. The Blue and White team was able to put across only one touchdown, it being the result of a long pass to Williams.

On Nov. 9, the Generals met the St. Johns team of Annapolis on Wilson Field, and succeeded in administering an 18 to 6 defeat to the Marylanders. The game was quite loosely played and from the spectators' viewpoint was somewhat unenjoyable. The affair was a passing contest for both teams.

Virginia came to Lexington Nov. 16, and the game of the year resulted in a 13 to 13 tie. "Tackling until their teeth chattered," the Fighting Generals surprised the Cavaliers and kept Washington and Lee from ranking last among the Big Four. The Blue and White warriors started a determined drive in the first quarter and succeeded in scoring two touchdowns before the half ended. The Cavaliers came back in the third quarter with a strong passing attack, and in a half that was replete with thrills, succeeded in knotting the count at 13 all. The Generals showed a fight and spirit that had not been displayed all season.

Captain Hawkins then led his team against Florida on Thanksgiving Day in the final game of the season. The Generals were unable to score until the last few minutes of play and lost to the Floridans by a 25 to 7 score. The Fighting Generals again displayed their famed spirit by holding down a team which was an overwhelming favorite.

The season, although not an outstanding success, was marked by some fine individual playing, and with a year of Rockne football behind them, the Generals should show to good advantage in the 1930 campaign. Coach Oberst is a man of fire and spirit, and if it is in his power, the Blue and White warriors will do great things in the next grid-iron season.

Varsity Basketball Resume, 1930

The Generals started the season with an experienced squad of men, and developed into one of the outstanding teams of the South, under the able tutelage of Coach Smith. With four letter men from last year's squad, and several newcomers from the freshman squad, a smooth working machine was developed which scored a total of 762 points in twenty games to 568 for their opponents. Of these twenty games played, sixteen were won and four lost, three to Southern conference foes and one to an outsider. Although the Generals will miss the services of Captain Wood next season, they should have another winning team.

St. Johns, of Annapolis, was the first team played on the Generals' schedule and was overwhelmed by the score of 51 to 16. Williams, lanky center, led the attack for Washington and Lee with 15 points, closely followed by Cox, with 10 points. Richmond University brought a well-coached quint to Lexington and succeeded in holding the Generals to a 39 to 35 score in the second game of the season. Cox kept the home team in the running with 14 points to his credit while his teammate, Williams, followed with 11. Bridgewater College was no match for the record-making Generals and took the short end of a 62 to 30 score.

After three home games, the Generals journeyed into North Carolina for two games. North Carolina University was added to the list of defeated teams in a fast game at Chapel Hill, the score being 25 to 17. Durham was next invaded and here the Generals defeated Duke, one of the best teams in the conference, by the close score of 33 to 29. Returning home, the Generals met and defeated another North Carolina team, N. C. State, by the score of 39 to 28. The Lexington quint added another victory to their list a few days later when they defeated Virginia in a closely played game by the score of 50 to 22.

The following week-end found the Blue and White team in Charleston, West Virginia, where they were to meet defeat for the first time. West Virginia presented a flashy attack, and the Generals took the small end of a 30 to 34 score. Williams continued his great work and amassed a total of 17 points. The Generals showed a reversal of form in their next game with Maryland at College Park and subdued the Old Liners by the score of 29 to 25. Williams again led his team in scoring, totaling 9 points.

The Generals returned to Lexington for a three-game series. North Carolina University met defeat at the hands of the Blue and White for the second time, the score being 39 to 32. This time Cox led his teammates in scoring with 13 points. William and Mary, who could not cope with the Washington and Lee five, was the next team to fall before the Blue and White by the score of 52 to 31. Cox again led the W. and L. scoring with 22 points. On Saturday night, the Generals whipped the Sewanee Tigers, after a hard fight, by the score of 35 to 30. Hanna came to the front in this contest to lead the scoring with 13 points. The Generals showed the strain of the last three games and just managed to eke out a 54 to 52 victory over Virginia in Charlottesville the following week. It was Williams' long shot in the closing minutes of play that gave the victory to the Blue and White. Upon returning home, the Generals showed their old-time form in trouncing Maryland by the score of 36 to 21. Cox was the high scorer, getting 15 points to his credit.

Blacksburg was the place of the Generals' next engagement and there they defeated V. P. I. with ease by the score of 35 to 26. Hanna again showed his ability to ring baskets by getting 15 points. On returning home, the Generals met a worthy foe in Duke and were defeated by the score of 29 to 26. It was the first conference loss for the Blue and White. Hanna continued his accurate shooting and succeeded in getting 9 points.

Kentucky was met on their home court in the next encounter and gave the Generals their second conference defeat by the score of 28 to 26. It was an extra-period game, and the Kentucky lads won as the result of McGinnis' long shot. Williams led the Blue and White attack with 8 points. The Generals, however, were not dismayed and returned to Lexington for their final game before going to Atlanta for the conference tournament. In the last game, V. P. I. was easily turned back by the large score of 53 to 32.

At the Southern Conference tournament, the Generals succeeded in trimming Mississippi University by the score of 33 to 29 in the first round in an extra-period game, only to lose out in the second round to Tennessee, in a hard fought game, by the score of 38 to 29.
Seventh Annual Scholastic Basketball Tournament

The Seventh Annual Scholastic Basketball Tournament which is now conceded as naming the South Atlantic preparatory and high school champion, was held in the Doremus Gymnasium March 6, 7 and 8.

All the contests were extremely close and hard fought, and it was only after a bitter struggle that Massanutten Military Academy finally won the championship by defeating John Marshall High School.

Resume, 1929

The Washington and Lee varsity baseball nine started the season with a team molded around Captain Gene White, Slanker, and Lowden, mono-gram men of last year's team, and Radford, Atwood, and Rainer, of last year's reserves. Although having very little veteran material, Coach Smith produced a fairly well organized team, the members of the 1931 team filling in the gaps left by graduation. The team, however, never seemed to hit its stride and closed the season with an unimpressive record, having lost a large majority of the eighteen games played.

The Generals got off to a good start on their schedule by administering a 9 to 7 defeat to Lynchburg College. Atwood and Captain White scattered the ten safeties taken from their offers over nine innings, while their mates were gathering two more tallies than the Hornet crew. This game was followed a few days later by a victory over the Catholic University of Washington. The Generals staged a three-run rally in the seventh inning and carried the game away by a 6 to 4 count. Princeton next invaded Lexington and succumbed before the masterful pitching of Radford, who toiled eight innings, and Atwood, who relieved Radford in the ninth inning with two on, and retired the side with strikes, giving the Blue and White a win over an aggregation which developed into one of the outstanding college nine of the East. Colgate was the next team on the schedule, but rain interfered with the game.

After a successful stand on the home diamond, the team journeyed into North Carolina only to be turned back three times by Tarheel teams. N. C. State was met first, and defeated the Generals with a football score of 21 to 14. The entire State team ran wild with the willow, while Slanker led the W, and L attack with four hits in five trips to the plate. The next day the Generals invaded Durham and were whitewashed by the Duke Blue Devils. The wearers of the Blue and White were able to garner only two hits off Jenkins, while the Durhamites collected eighteen hits and thirteen runs from the offerings of Radford. From Durham, the Generals went to Chapel Hill to take their third defeat at the hands of North Carolina University. The first Carolina man to face White crashed out a home run, but after that, White settled down, and the best that the Tarheels could do was to eke out a 7 to 5 victory.

Returning home, the Generals sent Delaware down to defeat, the score being 9 to 5. This victory was short-lived, for Virginia came to Lexington and administered a 6 to 3 defeat to the Generals. The game was a close battle and was not won until ten innings had been played. Davidson College followed in Virginia's footsteps and subdued the Generals by a 9 to 4 score.

The next game on the schedule was with North Carolina University, but rain prevented its being played. The Blue and White then were defeated by V. P. L. in Blacksburg by the score of 4 to 5 on their northern trip. Maryland was first encountered at College Park, the Old Liners winning by a 6 to 5 count in a fast game. The following day the Navy played host to the Generals and pounded Gene White's offerings hard to win by a 11 to 1 score.

On the return home, the Generals showed a reversal of form and defeated Guilford College, 3 to 1. N. C. State, after being rained out on the scheduled date of the game, returned the following Monday, and won a 9 to 3 decision after twelve innings of wrangling. The Generals went to pieces in the twelfth, and allowed six runs to cross the plate. The Old Liners from Maryland then came to Lexington to hand the Generals a 10 to 5 defeat. On May 10, behind fine fielding on behalf of their outfielders, V. P. L. scored their second victory of the season over the Blue and White nine. In the last game of the season, the Virginia Cavaliers bested Captain White and his mates by the score of 11 to 5.

Varsity Track Resume, 1929

The varsity track team completed the most successful season it has had for several years. Results of the outdoor season show that the team won four of the five dual meets, placed second in the state meet, and fourth in the Southern Conference.

The Generals had their first dual meet of the season on April 1 when they took on the cinder men from Maryland. The meet was quite close, and it was not until the end of the javelin event that the wearers of the Blue and White were able to really forge ahead. At the end of the meet the score stood 68½ to 57½ in favor of the Generals. Captain Backus, Sandifer, Grant, and Williams proved to be the mainstays in the running events, accounting for over half of the team's points. Sandifer with fourteen points was high scorer.

On April 13, the General track men invaded North Carolina, a victory and a defeat marking their trip. After a 73½ to 53½ loss to North Carolina University on Saturday, the Blue and White rallied to give N. C. State its first defeat of the season on Monday by a 64½ to 60½ score. In both meets the Generals were blanked in the discus and shot put, garnering the majority of their points in the runs. The Generals took first in the century 220, 440, mile, low hurdles, and high hurdles in the meet with N. C. State. Sandifer was the mainstay of the Blue and White machine. At Chapel Hill he placed second in both dashes, the broad jump, and high jump. It was his first in the broad jump against State that won the meet for Washington and Lee. Ralph Grant continued his sensational sprinting, grabbing both dashes against State and Carolina.

Returning to their stronghold, the Generals turned in a win over the Richmond University team by a count of 90 to 36. Captain Backus and his men had things their own way, taking eleven firsts out of a possible fourteen. The feature of the afternoon proved to be the two-mile run when Mahler, W. and L., and Onesy, Richmond, entered the home stretch side by side, Onesy managing to win by a final plunge at the finish. Sandifer was again high point man, scoring fifteen points.

At the 1929 Penn Relay Carnival, a third, fifth, and sixth place was garnered by the Blue and White. The sprint medley took third honors in the race for the championship of America; Grant placed fifth in the century won by Simpson of Ohio State; and the mile relay placed sixth. Despite the fact that the sprint medley started from the third from the last lane, the quartet composed of Williams, Grant, Sandifer, and Backus finished in third place, preceded only by Chicago and New York universities.

Out-scored in the field, the General tracksters dropped the state meet to the University of Virginia on May 1 at Charlottesville by a five-point margin. Virginia scored 50; W. and L., 45; V. M. L., 41; and V. P. L., 26. Grant and Backus shared honors, each winning two firsts. The mile relay, the final race of the day, was won by the Washington and Lee quartet composed of Sheppard, Simmons, Dickey, and Williams.

The Generals then closed their dual season with a 73 to 53 victory over Duke, taking every running event except two. Captain Backus broke the school record in the 880 for the fourth time during the season. The Blue and White took all three places in the 220, 440, and javelin, while the Blue Devils won the discus and shot put. Sandifer was high point scorer, with eleven points, closely followed by his teammates, Grant and Williams.

Washington and Lee, sending only five men to the Southern Conference meet was able to garner enough points to put them in fourth place. Backus and Williams won their respective events, the 880 and 440, while Grant and Sandifer placed in theirs. The mile relay team continued its successes by winning the Southern Conference Championship. This speedy quartet was composed of Captain Backus, Grant, Sheppard, and Williams.

Although winning only one meet of the six participated in, the Generals gave a good account of themselves in the other matches and showed that they will have to be reckoned with in the Conference race next year.

The season was opened against North Carolina, the Conference champions, who managed to administer a 5 to 2 defeat to Bus Malone's fighters. Florida was next met, and the Generals were barely nosed out, 4 to 3, after a spirited battle.

After a hard fight, the Generals were able to subdue V. P. I. by a 4 to 3 score to register in the win column. On the Northern trip, Washington and Lee met Catholic U., and Georgetown, losing close fights to each.

The match with Duke was one of the most colorful of the season, the Blue Devils finally winning through their superiority in the heavier weights. Sloshberg's fight in the 125-pound class was the bright spot in the meet.

As a newcomer to Washington and Lee, Bus Malone did great work with the fighters and turned out a scrapping team. With the influx of new material next year, the team should present a well balanced outfit and be a threat in Conference circles.

Wrestling Resume, 1930

Washington and Lee had the most successful wrestling season that it has experienced in many years. The Generals won all their meets by overwhelming scores and showed they were to be reckoned with in the forthcoming Southern Conference Championship bouts.

The General grappers opened the season on the home mat by swamping William and Mary with a 33 to 3 score. They next journeyed northward to West Point and after dropping the first two bouts, finally subdued the Army, 22 to 10.

Virginia was met in Charlottesville by the Blue and White and was defeatied by the overwhelming score of 56 to 0. The Cavaliers were unable to do a thing with Coach Mathis' proteges.

The Generals held the last three meets on home ground and were able to turn back in succession N. C. State, V. P. I., and Duke by very large scores. The Duke meet was one of the hardest experienced by the team, but the Generals showed their superiority by a 22 to 6 win.

During the season W. H. Mathis gained the cup offered by Coach A. E. Mathis for the highest point score of the year by amassing a total of 26 points. He was undefeated throughout the whole season and stands a good chance to become Conference champion in his class. The team as a whole was one of the few undefeated ones in Conference competition and has a great chance to be Southern champion.

History
So in the end a better sun is dawning.
Wisdom and Pain are mothered side by side;
Martyrs are dead and puppets cease their fawning.
Time is the price and Memory the guide.
Still in the hearts of men a battle rages.
Still in the souls of nations strife is bred:
Only the drama lives on different stages.
Mind is the playhouse. Folly apes the Dead.
Youth in its fire and fervor reads the story.
Seeing the glamour, blinded to the pain:
Counting upon the fortunes and the glory.
Reasoning not upon the cost of gain.
Life and its God go marching to the morrow:
History stands and meditates in sorrow.

—Thomas J. Hughes
"Upon the limbered ridge that lay
Across the bosomy hills away,
There sprang a low academy
So rude that no enthusiasts' dream
Could have foreseen the hou that it rears
Beneath its centuries' weight of years."

One of the world's greatest philosophers was to die
That he may move his multitude towards the goals
Of a conception to which he had consecrated himself, these days.
From him death was inevitable.

The gray walls of an Athenian prison held him captive
For a period of months while the Greeks resolved to give Alexander a holy sentence. As the prisoner passed day after day, feebly assuring the return of the ship that was to bear him from the country that he loved so dearly, he began to face death more squarely.

Life held for him no appeal for he was among men who had rendered him such kindnesses would be infinitely worse than death. Rather than spend his time wasting his faculties, he philosophized, and, as all deemed men who have passed the stage of anxiety and error, he sought a keen insight into the soul of universality.

The man was Socrates; the day and hour of his death was at hand. Crowded about him in his tiny cell were a few of his closest friends, who came to speak with their comrade one last hour. Though upon entering they were not nearly so nervous and afraid than was Socrates himself, he soon transplanted his noble spirit into their souls; for the remainder of the time the entire group sat in awful silence while this great man talked.

It is highly probable that within this single hour more human truths were expanded from a single man than ever before or since in the records of history. Regardless of this fact a statement that deserves some attention here is in which Socrates remarked that all opposites are generated out of opposites.

The story is told how he is said to have been convicted from the washer cause the stronger; from the slower springs the swifter; and from the president of the court we judge the boy victor. Thus it was in the beginning; at the present time we can not but wonder from just such contraries.
So it will be in the future.

Never in the passage of time has the historic muse presented a sadder portrait of violence, intrigue, greed, and inferiority than that of the history of Scotland from the formation of the Anglo-Saxons to the reign of Mary Queen of Scots. It was a picture of pandering war.

Yet out of just such a people, who filled the air with crees of battle on the open plain, then turned out their seals to proper at home, sprung a race in which America of today has just cause to proudly call her own.

This Scotch-Irish influx first started in 1737.
Then, on account of an evil foreboding concerning religion, politics, and representation away of those families who posted southward into the valley of Virginia.

Of course in this stream of migration there came down death, under Davy's patronage, and some English who desired fresher lands than those offered them along the seaboard. Thus the Scotch-Irish elemental predominanted.

It was at this time (1743) that a family of Alexanders came to the valley, among them Robert Alexander, the founder of the first classical school west of the Blue Ridge, later to become Washington and Lee University.

He was a son of William Alexander, who migrated from Scotland to Ireland in the middle part of the seven-tenth century. Robert, with his two brothers, came American in 1776.

Though Robert Alexander was educated at Edinburgh, and obtained a thorough training in Latin, Greek, and mathematics, he taught only the rudiments of the mother science. The result of this, under the direction of his Shuton, "A Selection of the Westminster Confession at his school.

Thus it is to these hardy frontiersmen who plunged firmly into the dangers of an untamed new world that we owe the debt of gratitude. To those who challenged the fury of the Indian invader by building forts and churches, by settling farms, do we owe our thanks for founding one of the oldest and traditional schools in America today.

The site of this schoolhouse, called Augusta Academy, was two miles southwest of Fincastle, in Roanoke County, which at that time included Rockbridge County as well.

In 1755 the Rev. John Brown, graduate of Princeton, was called to Fincastle and Timber Ridge churches, at which time he succeeded Robert Alexander as headmaster of the school.

During his time the academy was successively moved several miles a year; first to a point near the Providence Then to Mount Pleasant, near Fincastle, in the existing county of Rockbridge. This last move was shortly before the Revolution.

The Rev. Brown conducted the school until 1774, at which time he was granted by William Graham, who two years later succeeded him and became principal. Under Graham's directorship, in 1776, Capt. Alexander Spots-and Mr. Samuel Houston, both of Timber Ridge, offered the academy a tract of sixty acres, "the neighbors offering to build a dwelling house. 25 feet by 21, our story and a half high, besides their subscriptions, and assurance of the probability that ironwood and timber for building will be furnished gratis for at least twenty years.

The trustees accepted this offer, elected the Rev. Wm.
Graham cured and Mr. John Montgomery as its secretary and then moved Augusta Academy from Mr. Plowman to Timber Ridge early in the spring of 1777. As a result a meeting on the sixth day of May, 1778, invited by the patriotic spirit of the day, the name of the school was changed to Liberty Hall.

"The one
Foremost and first of all to bear
The name that since has filled the air;
That stirs the world's heart to its core
As never name has done before—
The name of WASHINGTON."

Though the school was again removed in 1785 to a place near Lexington, where it was housed in a stone building and considerably enlarged (only to be destroyed by fire in the year 1853), the name remained the same until 1789. At this time George Washington, last President of the United States, bestowed upon this school hundreds of shares of its stock in the James River Company.

It might be of interest to note that although the gift was made through the Virginia Legislature, which had originally presented Washington with the stock "for a seminary in the upper part of the state," it was Washington who school permission to dispose of this stock the school of his own choice. This was in the year 1786.

In 1797 Liberty Hall was named for the President as the receiver of this donation, and though the trustees of the school received word of the decision in Septem-

The late President of the United States didn't receive any message whatever from the school until the 14th of June, 1818, when eight weeks notice was given to the president of the post office at the time. The treasurer had written the letter in the fall of the preceding year.

As a result of this donation the name of Liberty Hall was changed, and the school building became the academy building. The deeded academy took on the aspects of a thriving, prosperous institution.

Back in 1784 the school received a charter of incorporation, under the legal counsel of the trustees appointed by that instrument. In 1795, upon word from Washington concerning his donation, the Virginia Legislature elected the president and requested the institution without taking the slightest attention to the rights vested in the trustees by the original incorporation. The principal achievements as they understood it were:

"In this college there shall be four schools: one of languages, one of mathematics, one of natural philosophy and astronomy, and one of pure, moral philosophy and college, and remain at which schools there shall be a professor and as many tutors as shall (from time to time) be found necessary. The president of the professor shall be appointed president, and the said president and professors shall be a body corporate by the name of the President and Professors of the College of Washington in Virginia."

Needless to say, the board of trustees immediately protested against such usurpation in vital terms, and soon months had passed, won their point. The next Legislature rejected the resolutions and changed the name of the institution to Washington Academy.

In 1794, Mr. Graham resigned his office, and for a period of two and a half years the school was committed to the direction of tutors. One of them, Conrad Speece by name, was characterized as being "uncouth in person, dress, and manner, incapable of social in disposition, ready to entertain, full of droll humor, and very amusing." He was never seen without his quid of chewing tobacco, for the quiet and unobtrusive manner in which he swallowed the liquid extract permitted him his practice even in the most elite of circles; it is said through he always slept with some of the weed tucked safely away in the side of his cheeks!

Following the regime under the tutors, the Rev. George A. Baxter was appointed rector of Washington College.

Though the school at this time witnessed its severest financial pinch, the beginning of the new century marked a new era in the history of Washington Academy. New instructors, new course of study, and new rules of order marked the most drastic changes.

At this time the town of Lexington, with its hundred families, set about and succeeded in drawing the academy from its former location into the center of North Main Street, at the foot of East Main St. This relocation was a major change, as it was said that the town itself did not offer the right environment for college students.

A thirty-acre tract was purchased in 1802 from Andrew Alexander. It is one of the three how far south on which the town of Lexington lies and commands an unobstructed outlook. An extract from an old history claims: "If this scene were set down in the middle of Europe, the whole continent would flock to see it!"

A plain two-story wooden house which had been the residence of the former proprietor was set aside for the use of the rector, and continued to be used as such for forty years.

Immediately a plan for a new building was drafted and adopted, and before the end of 1801 two academy buildings were erected of brick. One stood on the ground which is now occupied by Newcomb Hall, and the other building, the new building at the eastern extreme of the university new school. These two buildings, which were identical within and without, were both built of brick, and stood in the very center of the campus and were used as dormitories and class rooms for twenty years, at which time the center building was erected.

These buildings suffered premature decay because of narrow foundations of badly burned brick. It might be added that when the construction of these buildings was completed, as their ultimate destination was contracted by the assistance of students who attacked the tottering walls with old hammer rams.

At this time the academy consisted of thirty acres of ground, its four new buildings, some thousands of students worth a million of dollars, Washington's donation of $20,000 in stock of the James River Company. This stock proved itself very valuable, with a yearly income from $500 to $1,000. The College Academy enjoyed comfortable circumstances for its first time.

On the death of George Washington an appreciable evidence of the character of the donor was made by the handwriting by the president. In commemoration of this day, similar assemblies have been continued ever since.

Due to the diversion of the James River dividends to the building of the academy and the various associated, the college had received no benefit by the president. This, however, there was a gain both in number and age. During the last half of the decade, the average attendance at the college was greater, and the grand new school, which was taught by the instructors of advanced courses.

At this time it was deemed safe for students from Massachusetts or Illinois to attend the school without the least danger of personal annoyance; herefore strong cliques and social prejudices were frequent.

Then application from the parents of prominent families in the country was made, and students began to attend the school. Such a school as existed in connection with the college in the earlier days was becoming a necessity.

But few degrees were conferred in this decade. In 1815 a John Hendon, of Lexington, received an A.B., and in 1816 the same degree was conferred on two other young men. In 1817 the first literary course was conferred.

At this time the school was the highest in the country, the college was the highest in the country, and the college was the highest in the country.

After 1816 all students who did not live at home were required to stay in the academy buildings and take their meals at the stewart's house.

Though the rooms were nothing elaborate, they were very comfortable, and there was plenty of room for all. The town at the time was recorded that there were no more records as being kept in this period.

After 1818 all students who did not live at home were required to stay in the academy buildings and take their meals at the stewart's house.

As laws which were in effect at this time, the students were required to pass the following resolution: "If not resolved, that the society is hereby dissolved, and that any observer as a holiday the twenty-second of February and the Fourth of July every year, and they shall not be subject to penalties for dancing on those days, provided their conduct in other respects shall be conformable to the laws of the academy."

The faculty were required to visit the rooms of the students after nine o'clock each night, at which time the students were supposed to be at rest above.

In the grammar department boys under twelve years of age were punished by whipping or by "being up in"; older boys were "removed, rebuked, and exhorted with all long suffering and doctoring."

During the decade 1820 to 1830 the school witnessed the most critical period of its history. The James River stock more than supplied all needs, and even allowed for the appointment of a third professor. In 1827 the Cincinnati Society had received an amount of $1,000 from the academy, but the reception of this fund into the college treasury was delayed for over forty years.

The institution, in fact, found itself with excess funds and invested them in real estate and the land of the Fairmount Bank of Virginia. Regardless of the financial well-being of the academy, the tuition was raised to $125 per session. To offset this, however, the professors received an advance in salary (five dollars per session) during this period, and the treasurer, who received the large
The salary of $76 was made to set up his accounts twice a year.

There was great excitement at this time as to what to do concerning the location of the college grounds. There was delay in selecting this work on the college rather than the people who had property surrounding the grounds and by 1828 the members of the neighborhood favored to have the base of "College Hill" blue grist.

Along with these improvements the erection of a new college building occupied the minds of the people. Since it was constructed at this time, the president's house was made more convenient by the addition of a wing and two rooms. Various other small improvements were undertaken.

It should be noted that much consideration was given to the subject of discipline, and laws were made more strict. This was quite common, one expansion resulting along with the suspension of seven students.

It was at this time, in 1847, that a great discussion arose over the establishment and location of the University of Virginia.

Along with several other petitions, the trustees of Washington College, under the leadership of Dr. Jefferson, submitted a request for funds. The number of students enrolled in the regular college course was approximately thirty. Though they seemed to have convinced themselves better than the formally appointed little is to be mentioned concerning their application of study.

The salaries at this time specified the payment of $500 a year, $15 per month, and $15 from each student to the president. The professors received $15 and $93.75 from the students.

Towards the close of this decade, thirteen students received the Bachelor of Arts degree. No record is found of the confering of degrees after 1845.

Fortunately the record concerning the founding of the Graham Philosophic Society has been preserved. At a "Convention held in 1849 the society was born; later it was called the Graham Philanthropic Society.

Though no record can be found concerning the organization of the Washington Society, it might be supposed that it is somewhat younger than the Graham. In later years the organization was changed to Grand Loo Society, which organization still exists. The Washington Society is not on the campus at present.

It will be recalled by the reader that in a statement concerning the University of Virginia, John Robinson was named as one of those who did a great deal in attempting to preserve the institution now Washington Academy into the University. This is the least thing that John Robinson has done for the school.

In 1846, when Lexington was bidding for the removal of the academy from the mountains of town, John Robinson submitted a lot of ground, or if preferred, forty pounds in money and one hundred barrels of corn.

His next offer was the one hereafter referred to — that at 1847, in which he bequeathed his entire estate to the institution.

During this decade Robinson again subscribed a sum of money — in short, $5,000, in contemplation of new buildings for the school.

In 1848, Mr. Robinson was made a trustee of the college, and, though he thought highly of the cause of education, the management of the institution's affairs did not suit him exactly and he attended but few meetings. This, however, has detracted none from the esteem and memory which all those who are connected with what is now Washington and Lee University hold for his friend and benefactor, John Robinson.

Mr. Robinson died in 1856 at the age of 72 years, and was buried on the 20th of June with every mark of respect to the whole community, especially by the college authorities. The interment took place on the university grounds, and though for many years the place was largely only a stick fence, now there stands, the board of trustees took steps in 1852 to erect a monument in his memory.

In 1854 a gray limestone, fifteen feet in height and of one piece, was placed over the grave. This stone some few years later was thrown down somewhat mysteriously.

The college took this to mean that the public was not satisfied with what it had done in its recognition of the man to whom it owed so much. Consequently, in 1859 new designs were obtained and considered. In 1855 the new monument of Italian marble was erected and dedicated. The total cost of the monument was $750.

The old buildings of the institution were beginning to decay; likewise they were considered very inadequate for the building an institution of the magnitude that the college had grown to be.

In 1841 the initial movement was made by the board for the erection of a new building, which still stands as the center of the college quadrangle. The new structure, however, reserves in sight were seventeen shares of bank stock, which were sold at $2,500, with a surplus of approximately $500 a year income.

Though some small changes in the plans were made before completion, the general scheme was adopted the following year.

In consideration of all from the Cincinnati fund, which now seemed near at hand, and an increase of income from the James River stock, the trustees accepted a bid of Col. Jordan's in 1842. The sum required was $2,000, which was more than double the apparent resources in sight.

The rifles for the college building were made on the ground; this accounts for the hardening of the surface and terracing of certain portions of the landscape.

Some carries a most interesting mention in the history of the erection of Washington College.

With the laying of the corner stone in the spring of 1849, a remarkable crown of firecrackers was devised. He made an offering at this ceremony of a barrel containing forty gallons of fifteen-year-old brandy and two cases whiskey, said to be the best ever seen in Richmond.

It might be stated here that in those times the private manufacture of a whisket or brandy was to no more disadvantage than other commercial enterprises. However, was looked down upon. To illustrate the point of this remark, it may be said that the Rev. James Marston, who once sat on the court, in the tenures in question, took charge of the church in order only to find that seven of the eight stores were distillers.

A notice was given that a public treat would be at hand on that day, and a large company from town and county assembled at the foundation of the new building.

The program was inaugurated by Mr. Robinson exclaiming two of the leading officials of the college to the barret, in like manner followed a succession of dignitaries who honored the occasion. Though some carried marked this occasion, thirst soon broke through all restraint, and the monotony was pierced with "20 cases, pitchers, boxes, buckets, and a variety of other commodities," of which the most handsomely, rushed for the barrel, and those who gave a glorious exhibition of what free whiskey can do for the noble creature made in the best manner.

In 1842 the building was completed. It was three stories in height and had the dimensions of 58 by 54 ft, fronted with several tall columns. The stone on top is more recent.

During this time the degree of A.B. was conferred on forty-two young men, and the Master of Arts degree upon two men. The number of students in 1829 and 1831 averaged forty-four; their ages ran between 15 and 21. Very few changes were made in the regulations concerning hearing of the students, salaries of the president, professors, servants, etc.

By, Louis Marshall, Lexington, by birth, entered upon the duties as president of Washington College in November, 1836. Being a very learned man, having given a preparatory education to a large number of young men at a classical school on his farm near Post Oak, Kentucky, he was received cordially by all the trustees in his new position. By entering into the work Marshall proposed a new scheme of instruction and government. It was simple this: Every vestige of the curriculum arrangement was swept away, and the college was to be a separate school. This was clearing the deck for absolute freedom of study. Unless two or more young men voluntarily associated themselves for the purpose, there were to be no classes in any subject; nor were they required to conform to the attire or manner of dress common among themselves. Although certain attachments were to be required for the bachelor's degree, each student had the privilege of choosing this seal by any route or at any rate of speed that he so chose. Each professor was to be entirely at the service of the students in his department at any time.

Though Dr. Marshall was considered a very eccentric man, irregular in temper, extreme in his likes and dislikes, strongly unsystematic, arbitrary, and a despiser of centralized control, he was a great intellectual force, and a mainspring of sterling virtue and indefatigable spirit. His services at the college were greatly appreciated, and a new building for the preparatory department was erected at his suggestion in 1831.

Early in his reign—in 1829, to be exact—the grammar school, which had hitherto been a part of the preparatory department, and the preparatory department itself, were set apart, and called the preparatory department. Nicholas Brown Scholmak was made its first principal.

At this time the number of pupils did not exceed 120, but examinations for these boys were made twice a year. At the end of this year eleven boys were graduated, one distinguished, seven approved, and three disapproved.

Although Mr. Scholmak was not contented with his position, due to a failure on the part of the trustees to secure his guarantee of $250 a year, he continued to teach for nearly four years. At the end of that time, he resigned his position.

George A. Hester, D.D. and ex-president of the college, was then elected president of the board during the interregnum, and vacancies in the trustee board were filled at this time.

The only graduating class that the college had in this period was in 1836, the year of the regency, at which time the degree of bachelor of arts was conferred on eight students. No degree was issued after this until 1838.

In 1831 a new building was erected to accommodate the departments of science, grammar, and philosophy, and to house a museum. The building was called the beacon for a time; it stands southwest of the center building. The periodio in front is of a later date.

In 1832, two sessions, with vacations in the spring and fall to one annual session, with July and August for vacation, were made.

The regency of 1837 was a time of great importance in the establishment of a medical school, which was not reached, much was done at this time by Dr. John Cook Bennett to establish one here. At the same time a manual labor school was also prospered. These were the only grade beginnings of a new era in education; the idea of united mental, physical, and moral endeavor began to spread after this time.

Up until 1835 professors Haffner and Ramsey constituted the entire faculty; at this time Mr. Henry Vethake, formerly of New York University, was elected president and expounded his views in the following historic document that "on this occasion he delivered a satisfactory inaugural address, which was printed." This time the regency of 1837 was in effect.

For some time Hethake stayed here for only a short time, as the regency of 1840 was marked by the departure of a man by uninitiated students who had been dismissed. The president was so highly insulted and mortified that he determined to seek another position even at his own cost.

Though the youth administered a beating to Dr. Par- nham while he was attempting to aid the president and later in the day attacked a third professor in front of Mercur's Drug Company, only to be frustrated by the professor's wooden cane, the remainder of the faculty dissipated to rest.

Upon the resignation of President Vethake, the duties of the president were thrown upon the professors, and the principles of the institution were made subject to the professors, from and one-third of the fees. The tuition of the president at this time was $1,400 and $1,000 the salary of the first, and the professors, first and one-third of the fees. The tutor's salary was $1,406. An appropriation of $2,060 was made for books and expenditures.

It will be interesting to note that in the year 1837 the college uniform fashion reached Lexington, and upon a petition from the students the board passed the following ordinance: "Resolved, that each student who shall thereafter enter college shall provide himself with a coat made of the material which shall not exceed 37 per yard, and that the coat be cut with a straight collar, to be fashioned before with buttons and hooks and eyes, and be trimmed with a large, coarse, and black silk star worked upon each side of the collar and on each shirt, and that every student be required to wear his uniform in all cases of college boards." Thus, in the character of converting the academic into a military school, a board of visitors was appointed and ordered to meet in committee and report whether it would be better be known as the founding of Virginia Military Institute.

The faculty dwelt together in a spirit of unity and peace. Thus did the students, with the exception of a few, fight generally for very small causes, and at rare intervals, rising on the very edge of a rebellion.

The hoard kept at the college gave very little time for other contacts. The cardinal hours for retiring were from nine to ten, for rising, as late as the morning. There was an intermission from twelve to two, then another working period from two to four winding up with a third hour.

On Saturdays, before noon, there were society meetings; Saturday afternoons were left to the discretion of the students. On Sunday morning, there was a short service by the president of the college in the small hall, and the other students were allowed to attend church in towns. In the afternoon two Bible classes were held. The rest of the day was free, but at night there was a great effervescence of hearts and souls.

At this time the courses of study at the institution were comparatively the same as those of Princeton and Brown colleges. There were four departments: the preparatory; first, for the degree of bachelor of arts; second, for the study of those who were preparing for agriculture or a general business; third, a military course; and fourth, a teachers' course.

On January 2, 1841, President Haffner tendered his resignation at a meeting of the board. Two reasons put forward as reasons for leaving were, first, that his nervous system was giving way under the strain to which it had been subjected for twenty-two years, and he did not feel like asking for a reduction in the amount of labor devolving upon him; secondly, he stated that his pecuniary interests dictated his remaining here.

At a later meeting of the board a resolution was adopted to the effect that he would reconsider his resignation and continue to make his connection with the college. Between this meeting and one appointed for April 15 the correspondent was appealed to privately by leading members of the board. In April he agreed to remain at least one year longer.

Although Dr. Haffner again took up his work in the academic year 1841-1842, he was unable to continue it. Much encouragement was given by the president of the board to encourage him. The institution advanced in all points, and the good will of the students, faculty, and board was without equal.

At this time, over the protest of the faithful "watching of the treasury," Captain Robert White, the board finally decided to appropriate money for three houses at a cost approximately $3,400 each, and a fourth dwelling for the use of the president. These buildings were ready for occupancy in 1843.

President Haffner, with the aid of the professors, voluntarily prepared a revised edition and regulations of the college. Within the first year he made several revisions a real success by introducing the existing good will between Washington College and Virginia Military Institution was included. At this time the students of all colleges had the privilege of attending classes in both institutions.

This step was taken as a result of some bitterness of feeling that prevailed among the friends of the two institutions. The college, which had been in a constant state of growth and prosperity for eight or nine years, was suffering somewhat of a recession. This caused much delight to the friends of the institution.

Beneath the hands that excavated the halls, and reared the buildings, and the work was done without cost, and the college completed in the fall of 1846 with an increase of over twenty students. The number now reached eighty-eight.

Though the salaries of the president and faculty had been increased a few years prior to this time, due to the
This statement caused a pause in the hand voting for a new president. As a result of this General Lee was nominated for the position. All other names were immediately withdrawn, and the call was checked, and this great man was unanimously elected.

A committee of five members, including the rector, was appointed to draft a letter to General Lee, informing him of the election. Before the letter was put into writing, it had been suggested that the message be conveyed by a personal representative. No one was so qualified as Dr. Hoffman for such a task.

At this time Judge Brockenbrough filled this position. He was a man of imposing stature, exceedingly well mannered, and a good talker. There was no doubt in the mind of anyone that he was the only person fitted for this task.

On this occasion the Judge, thanks to his kind spirit, hesitated until the offer, stating that he could not undertake the work. Whether he was given some money for a cigar, I do not know. I was suggested that the college borrow some money from him.

This plan was accepted and carried out, consequently Judge Brockenbrough proceeded on his mission. He returned with the news that Lee would take the matter in hand.

On the 29th of August the board received a letter of acceptance from General Lee. It read as follows:

"Pownhall, Aug. 29, 1863.

Gentlemen: I have delayed for some days replying to your letter of the 25th instant, by reason of my election by the board of trustees to the presidency of Washington College, from a desire to give the subject of consideration. Without putting on the responsibilities of the office, I have feared that I should be unable to discharge its duties to the satisfaction of the trustees and to the benefit of the institution. In my judgment, the proper education of youth requires not only great ability, but fear of strength than I now possess, for I do not feel able to undertake the duties of the position with regular instruction. I could not, therefore, undertake more than the general administration and supervision of the institution. There is another subject which has caused me much anxiety, and I think, worthy of the consideration of the board. Being excluded from the terms of amnesty in the proclamation of the President of the United States of the 29th of May last, I have been an object of contempt to a portion of the country. I have thought it probable that my occupation of the position of president might prejudice the cause of hospitality; and I should therefore, derive injury to an institution which I would be my highest desire to avoid. I think it the duty of the country, in the condition of the country, to do all in his power to aid in the restoration of peace and harmony and in no way to oppose the policy of the government directed to that subject. It is particularly incumbent on those charged with the instruction of the young to set them an example of submission to authority, and I could not consent to be the cause of adverse opinion of the college. Should you, however, take a different view, and think that my services in the position tendered to me by the board will be advantageous to the college and country, I will yield to your judgment and accept the offer. Otherwise, I must respectfully beg you to consider me as withdrawing from the consideration of the board.

I am, gentlemen, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

E. B. Lee."

General Lee's election as president of Washington College was an affair lacking in pomp and ceremony. The simple exertions of the occasion were the special request of General Lee.

Great plans had been made to have the inauguration take place in the college chapel; invitations were to be sent far and wide; a band was to be engaged; evenglowing airs; girls robed in white were to sing songs..."
of welcome; it was to be a grand day. This was all done away with.

At nine a. m. on this memorable day General Robert E. Lee arrived with the students, ministers of the town churches, a magistrate, and the county clerk. Upon his entrance thes body rose in a turmoil of enthusiastic acclamation. "Long live General Lee!"

Following this a brief colloquy upon General Lee was delivered, then the president-to-be took the following

"Do swear that I will in the best of my skill and judgment faithfully and truly serve the college in the office of president, and uphold the standing and influence which its contact attached to the professorship at Lexington. His courtesy and cordial reference towards the faculty was largely responsible for this. However, on rare occasions and when it became necessary, those in contact with him found that he was capable of asserting the full measure of his authority.

The faculty of Washington College, prior to General Lee's accession to the presidency, consisted of nine professors and the students had numbered less than one hundred. During his few years of directorship the number of professors was more than tripled, the student body was quadrupled and the endowment raised materially. He said that "Washington College is a college you will not leave as a university."

Lee's first home in Lexington was the old home of Stonewall Jackson. He lived there for several years, until the present "president's house" was erected.

Three things on which Robert E. Lee has been termed a distinguished statesman, as a soldier, and as a writer, are straightforwardness. Through these three channels he expressed the importance of one great word, duty.

All of his papers concerning one of the qualities listed above, one in particular is handed down to us today in the form of the bonds and the comments of those who had the privilege of studying and understanding this great man. He wrote: "My experience has taught me that, while moderation and temperance in all things are commendable and necessary, so is it with the provision of food, and even of liquor is the best safeguard of morals and health."

The new president had ever at heart the success and welfare of the students. On coming to the college he found that it had been required for students to occupy the college dormitories; a few of the older students were granted the privilege of lodging in town. General Lee reversed this rule completely. All students were required to board and lodge in the families of the town to believe in the dormitory he deemed a privilege. The younger boys needed the influence of family life, he thought; the dormitory was as a place where the young men were open to temptations.

In 1870, due to ill health, the college authorities purchased a large house on the campus. The last residence of the old college was under the roof of Washington College. It is the first in the South.

The college year, which is divided into two terms, is covered by a tuition of $250, exclusive of laboratory fees. Room and board amounts to between $40 and $50 a month.

In closing, it might be mentioned that Washington and Lee University is neither a church nor a state institution; it is controlled by a self-perpetuating board. The Christian influence, however, is the force behind the Men's Christian Association, which was developed during the presidency of General Robert E. Lee, is highly active.

The honor system in which we are so proud is the feature. It has been in effect here many years, and was accepted by the southern colleges. It is strengthened by the social relations which exist between the faculty and student body. It is further maintained by the efficient student government, which is operated on the campus. No student is permitted to receive restrictions or undemocratic relationship.

It therefore is useless to say that the many hindrances to which the school was subjected for several decades after the Revolution are mere "points of history."

The tiny school founded by Robert Alexander in 1782, in the eighteenth century has slowly but surely developed into one of the nation's foremost and traditional institutions—the school that is today Washington and Lee University.

AN EXPLANATION OF THE HISTORICAL THEME OF THE 1906 "CALM."

In an attempt to recreate the atmosphere of the past and bring to our readers a vivid picture of Virginias bygone days, the editors have chosen a familiar form of stimulating memory and retrospect. The description and general treatment are modeled on the style popular when Jamestown was founded. The borders and insertions are copied, with slight alterations here and there, from books of the eighteenth century. The cover design is based on a style widely used in the several counties of past. Slight imperfections have here and there been purposely inserted to further carry the purpose of the purpose. The illustrations represent the great moments in Virginia's history and the scenes provide the connecting links of the story. The pleasant review of the Old Dominion's glorious past, and a corresponding appreciate of the present, will be effected in the minds of the readers who glaze through this book.

What Business Shall I Enter?

This is the question that must soon be answered by many a young man leaving college to make his way in the world. For him who is ambitious and willing to work, life insurance offers abundant opportunity and high reward. Unique in that it requires little, if any, capital, it is a business in which the effort contributed is the measure of progress, a business in which a man writes his own pay check.

The book is ended, and with it my labors. As the year draws to a close we look back upon it with memories only of that which was pleasant. The pain is forgotten, the worry and struggle hidden beneath the glory and happiness of something accomplished, and accomplished well. To my staff, and to the students of my Alma Mater, I extend thanks for assistance and support. I have tried to record the pageant of 1930, the drama of the school year. If within these pages you find something to bring a smile, something to provoke reminiscence, something to hallow memory, my work is more than rewarded. To the students of Washington and Lee I present the 1930 Calyx, with the hope that it will in some measure serve to represent the year now ending.

Thomas J. Sugrue
Editor-in-Chief.
In appreciation of the co-operation and aid extended to me in the construction and management of the 1930 Calyx, I wish to thank all those who so kindly and diligently gave their time and efforts to the success of this work. I wish to thank the staff which made my labors possible, the students who gave moral and financial support, the business men and business firms who showed their faith in our publication by advertising in it. I wish to thank each and all whose understanding and willingness to aid lightened the labors of myself and my staff. It has been a pleasure to serve in this capacity. I only hope, as I close my books, and you close this one, that it has not been in vain.

Richard Douglas Hamilton
Business Manager.
Before

Green fields before me, visions taking form;
Buds of ambition opened by the storm.
Where will I find myself at graduation,
Who will receive, and what—the last ovation?
Afterward

Old friends, old way,
Old wine and olden dreams;
My memory goes back to other days.
Old Times—Old Times—
The chimes repeat, it seems;
I shan’t forget, though we go different ways.

—T. J. S.
