Formal Portraits
Friend.

Hope you enjoy this book as much as I did doing it.

Hope you enjoy Washington and Lee as much as I have.

I won't say how much that is on either count, but we can safely say we've all been one way or the other in and down. One of the few things that this period of time revealed to me is how much energy can be spent and wasted on varying and self-maled destruction and civilization. The amount of creativity I've kept my eyes on until watching you, and was surprised to find that none of us have been affected in the same way by our experiences. So I can't really generalize on you. That's why the book is, I hope, a bit of everybody, in one way or another.

You're a topper in hockey, a politician in a moment a freak in the street and patches, red into one thousand other in bluejams. You're a republican estatist but said casket independent in my life, and planning a trip on safety in being or bylines at the lyric. You're ever needing the street eating steak and swineburgers with your niece's fancy old Millie's red. You're following Al Franken's painting drawing acting going down the road studying grammar laugher ignoring each other on campus coming running through the fields.

And you're surrounded and a job lost in the race sitting in the sun in Wilson Field fingering a glass in the cockpit bullshitting until four in the morning facing a professor with an overdue paper listening to your own footsteps through Washington street.

Signed,
