Trips to health center on rise

By HEATHER McDONALD STAFF WRITER

The Student Health Center has been a busy place this year.

Alcohol-related admissions to the infirmary have been more than double so far this year than at this time last year. The SHC has held a total of 24 freshmen, three sophomores and one senior overnight for observation this year. Only ten students had been admitted to or visited the SHC by mid-October 1996.

Alcohol-related admissions, which include an overnight stay, included students who were suffering from alcohol poisoning and severe intoxication. Visits to the SHC included injuries resulting from impaired faculties, less severe intoxication and requests for the morning-after pill.

The Blood Alcohol Concentration of students who have gone to the SHC has ranged from 0.125 to 0.337. The legal limit for those under 21 is 0.02 and 0.08 for those 21 and over.

"It is a very complicated problem," Director of Health Services Dr. Jane Horton said. "The environment of W&L, the behavior of the (freshman and sophomore) peer group all play a part (in binge drinking)."

Another factor is that all the freshmen live together and are a fairly homogenous group.

Many students already have experiences with binge drinking in high school so there is already a history of it."

There has been a noticeable drop in the number of juniors and seniors who have alcohol-related problems, Horton said.

"This means they have either moved away from the social scene or they know their limits better," said Horton.

Yet Horton emphasized that more visits to the SHC do not necessarily mean more drinking, but that students are more responsible about going to the SHC or bringing their friends when they've had too much to drink.

"Everyone has experienced increased sensitivity after Jack Bowden's death last May," Horton said. "The increased number of visits may well be for different attitudes, and advertising by the SHC." Horton said that she would much rather have inebriated students brought to the SHC than having them put back in their rooms.

Horton and four seniors recently attended a convention to investigate ways to curb binge drinking and will be researching various approaches.

Campus thefts continue

By KATHRYN MAYURNIK NEWS EDITOR

The crime spree at Washington and Lee isn't over.

Last week, there were two more incidents of theft on this campus. Thursday night, junior Laura Goodwin's wallet was stolen from her science library carrel. Although Goodwin spent four hours on the phone canceling her various accounts, the thief was able to charge $89 on one of her credit cards on an Internet service. No cash was stolen.

A W&L student and an assistant science librarian were sitting near Goodwin's carrel and did not notice anything suspicious.

Young feels that the use of the credit card will aid authorities in the apprehension of the thief, although they have no leads yet.

In a separate incident last week, $10 in cash was stolen from a W&L woman's bag in the Doremus gymnasium women's locker room.

"Everyone should be cognizant that we have a problem here. The honor system is a wonderful thing, but it doesn't apply to people who don't believe in it," Young said.

BYOB drains East Lex's normal alcohol profits

By KELLY TOTTEN

STAFF WRITER

BYOB has put a dent in the kegs at East Lex.

The East Lexington Store, the convenience store that has sold party supplies to fraternities for 21 years, is feeling the repercussions of the Interfraternity Council's new "Bring Your Own Booze" policy. Owner Jim Bowen estimates that one-third of his business comes from fraternities. The new policy, however, makes it illegal for fraternities to use house funds to purchase alcohol.

"It's definitely off from what it would normally be," Bowen said of fraternity business.

In the past, many fraternities had accounts at East Lex. Now, accounts are only used for ice, cups and other non-alcoholic party necessities. The fraternities' accounts for beer have been replaced by individuals who have collected money on their own to pay, Bowen said.

"It's not helping my business," he commented, "but it's not like I'm looking for a huge growth in alcohol consumption."

The BYOB policy, implemented this fall, has forced fraternity members to come up with alternative ways to provide beer.

An account at East Lex used to make collecting beer money easier for Chi Psi, said President Russ Woody, but they've canceled it this year. Although it never officially used house funds to purchase alcohol for parties, the fraternity's practice of "passing the hat" is now considered a violation of the IFC policy. Brothers are responsible for bringing their own beer and liquor, which also means they are responsible for who drinks their beer and liquor.

Individual responsibility is one of the objectives behind the policy.

"Fraternities should not be looked at as bars," IFC President Jason Callen said.

With the increasing national focus on risk management and fraternity responsibility, Woody was not surprised by the regulation.

SJC stakes own turf

ERICA PROSSER

STAFF WRITER

The Student Judicial Committee has extended the concept of honor. But they claim they don't have to step on the toes of the Executive Committee to do so.

The rumor that the SJC has become the new hearing board for honor violations is untrue, SJC President Mary Jo Mahoney said. The Executive Committee is still the final word for lying, cheating and stealing. However, students have come to associate honor simply with those three concepts. Mahoney and the SJC believe that "honorable behavior" does not end with those things.

"It's the same idealistic foundation," Mahoney said. "The definition of honor can be carried past lying, cheating, and stealing."

Mahoney explained that the SJC's growth since spring 1996 has been complicated and important and many students are unaware of the committee and the procedure changes. Few people know, for example, that the SJC Blue Book was modeled after the EC White Book.

"People were losing confidence in the SCC," Mahoney said.

The process of creating the current SJC was poorly followed by students, Mahoney said. Open forums held for discussion of the Blue Book were usually attended by only a few people. She said that the changes made are important; procedures in the committee have been defined more clearly, and automatic penalties exist now. Students need to know about the changes before they suffer penalties they didn't expect for an action.

Mahoney said that the students have not been well-informed, and the SJC needs to make itself more known to the W&L population. Therefore, the jurisdiction of the SJC can be more easily explained for the students by the term "honorable conduct." Acts such as vandalism, fighting and other "ungentlemanly" practices cannot be categorized as lying, cheating or stealing, so the SJC becomes necessary. But the committee is sharing power with the EC, not taking power from it.

"The SJC can turn cases over to the EC and vice-versa," Mahoney said.

Every case is evaluated for the proper jurisdiction. The procedure for reporting cases to the SJC is much the same as in reporting cases to the EC; a student can try to work out the situation on his own, but the committee will act on what is reported.

Mahoney emphasized that the change in the appeals process directly affect students.

Previously, a student could appeal a case to the University Board of Appeals, which would send the case back to the committee with a recommendation. Now the student may appeal to the University Board of Appeals, and the Board's decision is the final word on the matter.

The concept of "honorable conduct" and the SJC is nothing new. All student governing bodies on campus exist to discourage "ungentlemanly" behavior. But simply using the word "honorable" may help to remind students that honor does not end with the three major offenses associated with the EC.

Mahoney made it clear that a violation of SJC rules is not an "honor violation," and she said that students should remember that the EC still holds the power of punishment for lying, cheating, and stealing. But the SJC is serving a purpose in the enforcement of Robert E. Lee's "notion of individual responsibility."

"We're trying to get people to carry themselves more honorably," Mahoney said.

President John Elrod praises the efforts of the SJC. "They've been trying really hard to emphasize personal responsibility and exercise actions that fall outside the jurisdiction of the EC."

Local help for battered women: Habitat, Project Horizon build Lexington shelter

By DANIEL SOZOMENU

STAFF WRITER

Lexington is by definition a small town.

Unfortunately, it is not without big-city problems. Domestic violence, an enormous problem in this country, is a real problem here, despite the apparent peacefulness and beauty of the Shenandoah Valley.

To help on a local level, Washington and Lee's Habitat for Humanity and Rockbridge County's domestic abuse organization Project Horizon are beginning work in the next few weeks on the first shelter in Lexington for battered women and their young children. Most of the construction will take place in April.

The shelter will have three floors and a basement and will immediately accommodate 12 women. Plans to expand capacity for 16 women are already in the works.

"This is the first project with strictly students involved firsthand," Habitat President David Sugerman said. "The shelter is a way to reduce potential problems for women who have no option but to leave."

The nearest shelters are in Stanton and Roanoke, neither of which is exactly around the corner.

Sugerman said.

This newest project will incorporate manpower from both the W&L and Virginia Military Institute Habitat for Humanity programs. The construction will be supervised by the Timber Framers Guild.

Professor Grigg Mullin, an instructor of civil engineering at VMI, had recruited cadets to put together the catapult called Trebuchet, which now resides on the VMI parade grounds. The cadets assembled the device through the use of heavy timbers, piquing the interest of the Timber Framers Guild.

Since then, the TFG has been active in the Lexington and Buena Vista areas, especially in the erecting of houses.

"The women will be able to be independent as well as live and talk with other women who endured the same things," Sugerman said.

The W&L Executive Committee allocated $7500 for the affair, while plans to raffle off President Elrod's parking space to raise more funds are in the works. In addition, the W&L and VMI Student Activities Boards are working in conjunction to arrange a benefit concert, with its revenue defraying the operating costs of the shelter.

APO builds steps

ANDREA EWING
ASSOCIATE EDITOR

It's a little easier to climb the hill behind the library; there is a new addition to the hill. Last Saturday morning, 14 members of Alpha Phi Omega, Washington and Lee's service fraternity, helped to build eight steps down the slope leading to Woods Creek, making it easier for Woods Creek residents to get to the library.

The group began around 9 a.m. with tools provided by Buildings and Grounds.

APO started the project with only eight steps and will add seven more soon.

The area itself will be the object of an ongoing project with a hand-rail to be added later as well as some plants and a bench.

Junior Patrick McCormack first introduced the idea at a planning retreat a year and a half ago. The project was given final approval at last year's spring planning retreat. McCormack is working with Scott Beebe of Buildings and Grounds throughout the evolution of the area.

"The whole project will make it easier to go from Woods Creek to the library," McCormack said. "When the new student center is built there will be much more traffic, not only from Woods Creek but the whole school."

The main idea behind the project according to McCormack is to "make it a much better environment where students can go and study."

None of the supplies used to build the steps were purchased with APO funds.

Supplies such as the railroad ties came from the Southeast Railroad Company in Salem. All the labor came from students who wanted to help improve their campus.

One of the four main areas of service for APO is service to the university, and McCormack feels this project embodies just this principle.

But he says "improving campus needs to be a campus-wide effort. It is good to invest in our school while we are here and try to make it better."

With the number of people who showed up to help, the group was able to get done what it had planned to complete.

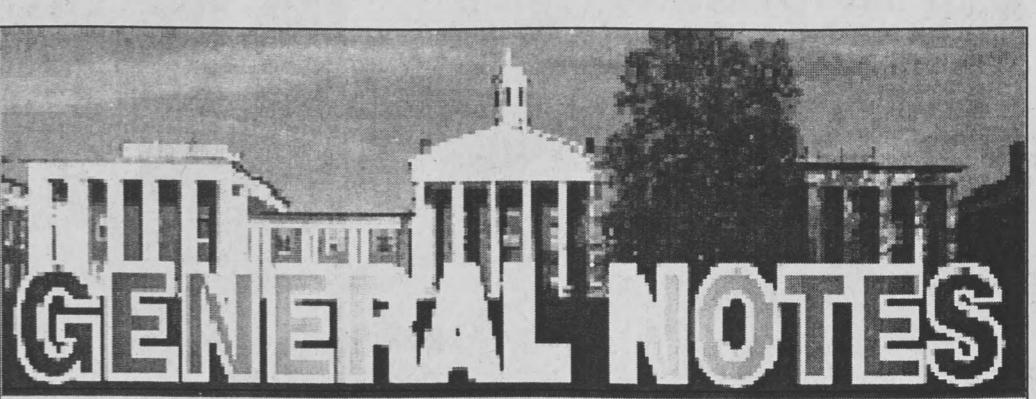

"There were some limitations, but the heart was there and we did as much as we could with the limitations," McCormack said.

These past Saturday mornings were the start of an ongoing project from students who wanted to help improve their campus.

The group wants to get other organizations and students involved not only in this project but also helping other areas of the campus.

McCormack says that any group or individual who wants to help in this or any project can contact him by phone at 462-5245 or by e-mail at pmccorma@wlu.edu.

"There was no way of getting around it. It's all about liability," Woody said. "BYOB was inevitable."

Woody claims that the policy is not a big deal, it just simply takes the responsibility off from the fraternity. BYOB will also raise party-goers' awareness, believes Callen. People should not just be aware about how much they are drinking, but whose alcohol they are drinking, he said.

"People need to stop expecting beer when they go to these parties. When you ask for beer at a party, you are literally taking money out of someone's wallet," Callen commented. "Personally, I don't feel like it's my responsibility as a fraternity member to pay for everyone else's beer."

Others feel that their Friday and Saturday nights are losing the sense of escapism provided by worry-free bartending and an endless supply of beer.

"Some brothers feel that parties are more about risk management than having fun," said John Dzik, treasurer of Sigma Phi Epsilon. "But the penalty is too huge to even think about going against (the policy)."

Sig Ep never used house funds to purchase alcohol but, unlike Chi Psi, the fraternity has kept its account at East Lex to buy ice.

Woods Creek Grocery celebrates anniversary

By LIZ DETTER

w&life EDITOR

It's often compared to the Whistle Stop Cafe, but although the Woods Creek Grocery may evoke images from "Fried Green Tomatoes," this little find isn't the figment of a Hollywood imagination.

Oct. 27 will mark the one-year anniversary of the remarkable renaissance of Woods Creek Grocery. In the year that has passed since Mellie Strickler bought and renovated the ramshackle convenience store on Lime Kiln Road has evolved into a warm and inviting cafe.

After 5 years as a restauranteur in Farmville, Va., Strickler had decided to take some time off. While in Lexington visiting a friend, she looked in the paper for a house to buy.

"I actually had no intention of buying a business," Strickler said. "I was going to spend a year skiing and paddling. But then I saw a picture of this place and fell in love with it. It wasn't even a good picture!"

When Strickler bought the grocery, it had been closed for the first time in its 75 year history. She redesigned the store, brightening it up and adding a kitchen. At first, Strickler concentrated on stocking groceries and prepared only baked goods, breakfast, soup and take-out sandwiches.

Soon after Strickler opened, she was visited by Pennie Griffin, an old friend from their bartending days together in Washington, D.C. Strickler quickly convinced Griffin to quit her job in D.C. and move to Lexington to help run the store.

"I came down the first Friday in November, and I moved here the following Wednesday," laughed Griffin.

Woods Creek Grocery has that kind of enchanting effect on people. The small wooden building nestled next to the Chessie Trail is charming and unpretentious, with a porch out back and seating inside. The grocery is stocked with alcohol and foodstuffs. The restaurant developed as its reputation grew. Customers became friends and donated chairs and tables, painted a mural and spread the word.

"I've never seen anything like this," Griffin said of the grocery. "People are always saying, 'When are you going to expand?' but if we did, we'd change the character of the place. It's nice being small."

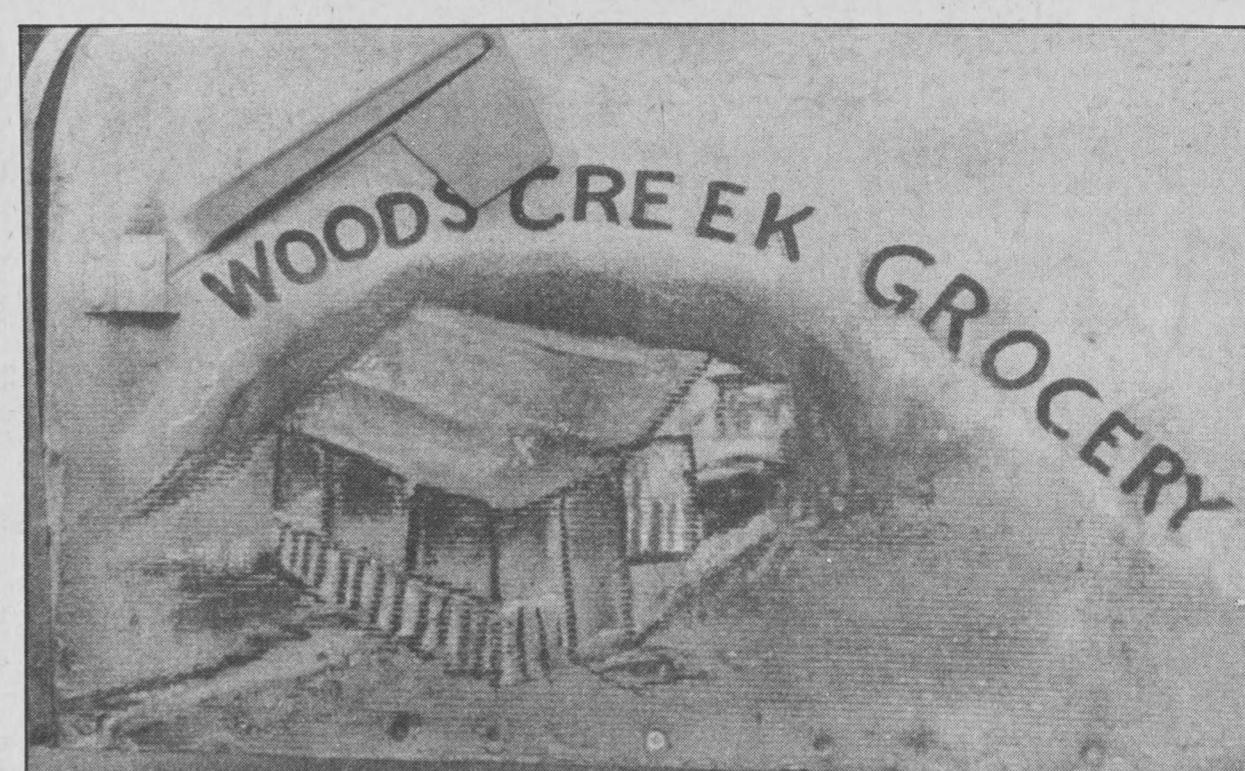

While most of the customers are townspeople, students are catching on, too. Strickler has hired a third person to adjust to growing demand, but is happy with the small size of the grocery.

Soup, salads and sandwiches are standard fare, but Strickler and Griffin vary the dinner menu. Their recipes come from the combined 42 years of restaurant experience between them, as well as cooking magazines. Dinner prices range from $4.25 to $8. Excellent choices include the Cajun grilled chicken breast, crab cakes and any of the tempting desserts.

After a year in Lexington, the two friends mean to stay here long into the future.

"I plan on staying here forever. I've never been as happy as I am now," said Strickler.

"It's a great town," added Griffin.

Dean Anne Schroer-Lamont has proven herself to be an asset to the W&L community in her role as director of counseling and as Associate Dean.

Schroer-Lamont was raised in northwestern Pennsylvania and attended undergraduate school at Defiance College in Ohio, where she pioneered the junior-year study abroad program. Schroer-Lamont took advantage of the program that she had helped to establish; she studied abroad herself at the University of Strasbourg in France.

After getting a master's degree in French and Spanish, Schroer-Lamont began teaching high school French. Even then she was utilizing her counseling skills, as students would often seek her advice.

In the 1970s, foreign language requirements were removed from schools, and the language careers field dried up. During this time, Schroer-Lamont began to seriously consider counseling as a profession; she later received her doctorate in counseling and higher education administration at the University of Northern Colorado.

Schroer-Lamont came to W&L in 1985 when the school became coeducational.

Schroer-Lamont is a pioneer in another area as well: gender issues. She began to research women's issues, including key decisions that women must make in their personal and professional lives. Of special interest to her are gifted women and how they deal with work, family, and society.

"Personal strength and courage are very important qualities for women to access," she says. "Women should put themselves in challenging situations both intellectually and physically to see how resilient they are."

In 1985 Schroer-Lamont began a 10-year study on women here at W&L. She followed these women through their undergraduate years and into their graduate and professional lives. This study was continued when during the winter of 1996.

She compared 110 Norwegian women with the W&L women and advanced cross cultural research in this field.

During the summer of 1997, Schroer-Lamont attended the World Association for Case method Research and Application conference in Warsaw, Poland. WACRA is an organization composed of researchers, professors and professionals from over fifty countries. There she served as a moderator for researchers and speakers. She also met two other women at the conference who were active in the field of gender study.

Following the conference, Schroer-

Lamont and these two colleagues developed a presentation to teach researchers and educators how to write case studies on gender issues. According to Schroer-Lamont, case studies are invaluable tools used at universities, law and medical schools and other educational institutions.

Amazingly, the entire presentation was arranged through e-mail and was presented at this year's WACRA conference in Edinburgh, Scotland. In this way Schroer-Lamont has helped to bring gender issues onto the international scene.

Gourmet meals with a college student's budget: Feathered friends in your kitchen

By DOUGLAS BROWN &

ROBIN SEATON

STAFF WRITERS

The notoriously limited budgets of college students affect even yours truly. So we have decided to dedicate this week's article to the budget-conscious home preparation of that versatile white meat, chicken. We eat chicken frequently, because Doug prefers meat and starches to vegetables, and because there are so many unique ways to prepare it.

An important initial element is properly handling raw chicken. To protect your kitchen and yourself from bacteria, place chicken in a plastic bag before you bring it home. The bags found in the vegetable section at the grocery store work well. If you plan to wait several days before cooking it, freezing the chicken is also advisable.

Wash raw chicken thoroughly before you begin to cook it, and be sure to use anti-bacterial soap on your hands before handling other items in the kitchen. If you place the meat on any surfaces, cleaning them immediately with anti-bacterial cleanser is necessary. Utensils used with the chicken must be cleaned thoroughly before using them on other dishes. We may sound overly-cautious, but we know several people around Lexington who have made themselves and others very sick through their carelessness.

We have several suggested methods for preparing chicken. We hope you have gained a sense of the numerous possibilities available when cooking chicken. Experimenting with it rarely goes wrong. It's healthy, tasty and friendly on the college budget.

PICK OF THE CHICKEN

All Natural

Doug's Stir-Fry:

Cut boneless chicken breasts into several small strips, the more the better. Fry them in olive oil until they start to turn golden brown. Wash the chicken off your knife and cut small strips of your favorite raw vegetables; we often choose green peppers, mushrooms, lots of onion, maybe some pineapple - the possibilities are limitless. Continue cooking this mixture, adding whatever spices you prefer: garlic, soy sauce, lots of salt, a honey-mustard sauce, Italian salad dressing, etc. When the vegetables are soft and pliable, serve your creation over rice or noodles and enjoy.

Robin's Mom's Mandarin Chicken:

Place whole boneless skinless breasts in a casserole dish. Liberally douse chicken with Worcestershire and soy sauces, salt, pepper and onion powder. Spoon contents of small container of frozen concentrate orange juice onto chicken. Cover with foil and allow to marinate for several hours in refrigerator, and then bake, still covered, at 350 degrees until golden on top. Wild rice makes a tasty accent for this dish.

Southern Fried Chicken:

Fill a large Ziploc bag with two cups of flour, salt, pepper, onion powder and any other desired seasonings. Drop each chicken piece individually into the bag; seal and shake to coat chicken. Cook chicken in a skillet of hot vegetable or olive oil until crispy. We suggest mashed potatoes with gravy, corn and sweet tea to complete this meal.

topics as career development, balance between work and family, sexual harassment and gender stereotyping. Participants received instruction in how to locate sources for gender research and how to construct a quality gender case study.

In an article written for the WACRA newsletter, Schroer-Lamont and her colleagues write,

"Gender cases present an area of complexity which many students are not prepared to address in their future workplace."

Schroer-Lamont's participation at the conference was so enjoyed that she has been asked to return in 1998 for the conference to be held in Marseille, France.

In January 1998, Schroer-Lamont will travel to Sweden for six months with her husband, who has received a Fulbright Fellowship to teach and research there. She is taking this opportunity to enrich her studies again. Through her extensive research, Schroer-Lamont has focused on an area which has traditionally been ignored.

Schroer-Lamont also serves as the advisor for the Women's Forum and Women in Leadership, two student organizations for women here on campus.

These groups promote interaction between female students and female faculty and deal with issues faced by women in school and in their personal lives.

"I have had the benefit of helping women become stronger," Schroer-Lamont says. "This is one of the most rewarding jobs, and I feel blessed to have this position."

Ashley Judd kicks butt in "Kiss the Girls." PARAMOUNT PICTURES

'Kiss the Girls' doesn't meet expectations

By SHELLI HENDERSON &

ERIN ROSENCRANS

GUEST CRITICS

The preview for "Kiss the Girls" looked so promising. Scary, seductive — something for everyone. We wanted our first cinematic critique to be positive; however, the movie sadly let us down.

Kiss the Girls stars Morgan Freeman, Judd and Cary Elwes. Ashley Judd and Elwes are easy on the eyes and Morgan Freeman is a talented actor. He plays the role of smart cop better than anyone (i.e. "Seven"). The actors did well with what they had. But they did not have much.

The plot, while intriguing, was shallow in its execution. A serial killer is victimizing beautiful talented women in Durham, N.C. He collects the women (not girls) and stores them away in a dungeon in the woods. He feeds them peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, drugs them, and presumably rapes them (although we are fortunately spared any scenes of sexual violence).

Judd, a young doctor and amateur kick-boxer, uses her superb kick-boxing skills to escape from the dungeon. Freeman, who is some kind of cop psychologist, comes to question Judd and together they set out after the killer. Freeman, coincidentally, is the uncle of one of the missing girls and thus has a strong emotional tie to the case.

There are few twists and turns in the plot. There is actually more than one killer, but we are never told how the killers came to know each other or what their childhoods were like or any other juicy information that might help us to understand their motives.

We heard a rumor that the book on which this movie is based is pretty good. Perhaps it would answer our questions. Maybe one of us will actually get a chance to read it some day, but not this term.

While we don't have too many good things to say about this movie, we still suggest that you check it out. It was not horrible; it just wasn't as good as we'd expected. We would place "Kiss the Girls" somewhere in the three-out-of-five stars range. It is a moderately entertaining way to spend a couple hours — particularly considering the other options available in Metro Lex.

Before a capacity Homecoming crowd at Wilson Field, quarterback Christian Batchellor led the Generals to victory to pick up a single first down in the opening quarter.

The Washington & Lee football team celebrated homecoming in grand style as it captured its first victory in a 32-22 win over Davidson College. Sophomore quarterback Christian Batchellor tied a school record as he threw 4 touchdown passes including a 47-yard strike to freshman wide receiver Wes Hardy in the third quarter. It was surely a career day for Batchellor, who finished the game 18-28 for 288 yards, no interceptions and four touchdowns. Tailback Seth McKinley also had a big game as he picked up 94 yards on 28 carries and finished the game with 146 total yards.

It wasn't only the offense that got the job done for the Generals, the defense and special teams also played extremely well. The defense, led by Jack Boyd and Omar Moneim, consistently stopped the Davidson offense in key third down situations. The defense wrapped up the game when defensive back Ryan Fletchey recovered a Davidson fumble inside the Generals five-yard line late in the 4th quarter. The kicking game was excellent for the Generals as Matt Holbrook had a great day. Holbrook booted a 35-yard field goal in the first half but more importantly he pinned the Wildcats inside the five-yard line twice in the second half, including a 49-yard punt that tolled out of bounds at the Davidson two-yard line.

Things did not look good for the Generals early as they fell behind 14-3 early on in the game. With two minutes left in the 1st quarter, the Wildcats took the lead 7-0 after Eric Ferguson ran 10-yards straight up the middle for a touchdown. The Generals offense looked like it was going to have yet another long day as it failed Batchellor took advantage of excellent pass protection from his offensive line and he was able to sit back in the pocket and utilize his strong and accurate arm. The Generals went up by 11 after Batchellor threw a 47-yard touchdown pass to Wes Hardy off a play action fake. However, the Wildcats came roaring back as Tommy Dugan hit a wide-open Eric Ferguson for a 27-yard touchdown and following a successful two-point conversion the score was 25-22.

SENIOR DEFENSIVE TACKLE Omar Moneim (#99) crushes the Davidson ball-carrier, exemplifying the Generals superior defensive performance in their first victory of the season against the Wildcats.

However, in the end it would be the Generals day. Early in the 4th quarter Batchellor tied the school record after he threw his 4th touchdown of the day, this one a two-yard strike to Scott Moses. The Generals smothering defense and Matt Holbrook's clutch punting helped hold Davidson scoreless in the final quarter and Fletchey's fumble recovery sealed the deal.

The homecoming victory improves the Generals record to 1-4 and drops Davidson to 2-3. Washington & Lee now heads back out on the road for two straight road games. Next week they are at Hampden-Sydney and the following week they are at Sewanee.

Women's soccer extends winning streak to 10

By FRANCES GROBERG STAFF WRITER

The Washington and Lee women's soccer team is just unbeatable. This past week, they extended their winning streak to ten, the longest in school history, with victories over Goucher and Roanoke. The team is now 10-0 for the season.

On Saturday, while most of the W&L population was busy tailgating, the Generals were in the midst of their fourth shutout of the season against Goucher. The game was scoreless throughout the first half, but the women managed to pull out the game.

Less than four minutes into the second half, freshman Amanda McDermott scored her second goal of the season, unassisted, to put the team up 1-0. Then, with 3:20 left on the clock, junior captain Karin Treese scored her 15th goal of the season off a through ball from senior Erica Reineke.

The Generals' success in the game came from their midfield domination, which was so effective that the W&L goalies, Stephanie McKnight and Lauren Harris, did not have to make a save. The Generals outshot their opponents 17 to four and won seven corner kicks to Goucher's three.

On Thursday against Roanoke, Treese scored her eighth game-winning goal of the season to preserve the women soccer team's unbeaten record. The junior captain has scored all but one of the game-winners this season.

Men's Soccer

With a large Homecoming crowd looking on, the men's soccer team on Saturday dropped a huge game to ODAC rival Hampden-Sydney. Hampden-Sydney, as yet undefeated in league play, looked hungry for a win on Washington and Lee turf. The all-male school scored two goals within the first fifteen and a half minutes of play, and the shaken Generals would never recover. Though they created several opportunities to score, the Generals couldn't capitalize and were shut out 3-0 in what could prove a tell-tale game for their season.

The men's soccer team came into the game riding on a five-game winning streak and looking for a big Homecoming victory against the first place Sydney. A win on Saturday would have boosted the team's overall season record to 8-1 and established their status as a major contender this year. However, Hampden-Sydney's early goals and physical play proved a bit too much for the Generals to handle. The Sydney players attacked constantly and aggressively, and managed to rack up 26 fouls despite the fact that the referees called a very loose game. At times things got a little out of hand, with the contest looking more like a cheap street-fight than a fluid soccer game. However, the teams managed to avoid a full scale-brawl despite a few close calls in the second half.

Saturday's loss does not bode well for the men's soccer team who came into the season with very high expectations. Although playing well, the Generals have been unable to rise to the challenge.

lenges of big-time competitors Hampden-Sydney and Virginia Wesleyan. Although Saturday's game is definitely not the last word on their season, the Generals will need to find the will to rise to the occasion if they wish to be number one.

Volleyball

Perhaps head coach Terri Dadio's team should stop scheduling tournaments and instead stick to conference games. The Generals struggled once again in an out-of-town tournament last week, finishing last in the Emory Tournament, following a seventh place finish in the Maryville tournament several weeks ago. On the up side, they continued their impressive streak of consecutive ODAC regular season victories against Lynchburg on Tuesday. It now stands at 23 straight games. The Generals are currently 10-8 overall, 6-0 in conference play.

Against Lynchburg, who entered the game with a 14-5 record, 2-2 ODAC, the Generals put away a stingy defense to roll 15-6, 15-11, 15-11. In the first game, the teams traded points and serves until the score reached 7-5 in favor of the Generals. After two serves from sophomore Nancy Reinhart and four from senior Hilary Martin, however, W&L leaped to a 13-5 advantage; the run featured kills from Reinhart, senior Holly Thomsen, and junior Megan Snodgrass. After trading sideouts, sophomore Megan Macy served twice, one of which was an ace, to end the game.

Games two and three were hard-fought affairs. Lynchburg was able to keep both close due to a strong defensive effort, especially in terms of blocking potential W&L kills. In game two, Lynchburg pulled to a 10-6 advantage before Reinhart, helped by kills from Thomsen, and Martin, served five times, including an ace, to make it 11-10. Freshman Pam Saulsbury closed the game with three service points, the last of which was another ace. Overall, the Generals had nine aces for the match. The final game was much of the same, as the Generals fought their way to a tenuous 10-7 lead. However, consecutive service points from senior Ali Beard, Snodgrass and freshman Melissa Williams made it 14-7. After surrendering four straight, the Generals iced the match with a 15-11 victory. Overall, Reinhart had 14 kills, Martin 12 kills and 11 digs, and Saulsbury 23 assists.

Little went right for the Generals at Emory. In the first match, they fell to Sewanee in a heartbreaking marathon match 15-6, 10-15, 5-15, 15-8, 10-15 despite 23 kills and 22 digs from Reinhart, 19 kills and 20 digs from Thomsen and 34 assists from Beard. They followed that loss with a rematch against Westminster, a team they faced in the Maryville tournament. The result was the same, however, as regionally ranked #8 Westminster cruised to a 15-2, 15-7, 15-12 victory. Martin led the team with seven kills. In the third game, the Generals faced Centre. Despite 11 kills from Reinhart, nine kills from Snodgrass and 27 assists from Beard, W&L lost 6-15, 17-15, 3-15, 4-15. In the last game, Greensboro defeated the Generals for seventh place 15-4, 15-5, 11-15, 15-6.

The Generals play only once this week, at Guilford on Thursday.

X-Country

Senior Jason Callen, with a time of 26:18, and junior Darrick Alford, with a time of 26:24, finished 1-2 to lead the men's cross country team to the Virginia Division II-III State Championship at the Rockingham County Fairgrounds on Saturday. The Generals finished with a score of 31 to distance themselves from runner-up Roanoke by 25 points. Other top finishers were Alex Taylor who finished eighth overall with a time of 26:55, Greg Ruthig who finished ninth with a time of 26:58, and Will Olson who finished 11th coming in at 27:25. Next week, the men will head to Gettysburg to compete in the Gettysburg Invitational.

The women's cross country team finished in third place, just two points behind eventual winner Lynchburg, at the Virginia Division II-III State Championship meet at the Rockingham County Fairgrounds on Saturday. Junior Natalia Dorofeeva once again led the squad with a second place finish overall and a time of 20:05. Other top finishers for the Generals were Carson Flowers (sixth overall, 20:21), Elizabeth Grenfell (12th, 21:18), Wendy Case (19th, 21:39), and Jana Heisler (20th, 21:41). Next week, the women will travel to Gettysburg to compete at the Gettysburg Invitational.

dream teams not nearly as exciting as they were built up to be. What is the enjoyment of watching a team that you know is going to win go out and destroy someone? I saw the decision of the United States to put together the basketball dream teams not only as economically selfish, but also as egotistical and ethnocentric. We couldn't stand losing to anybody at a game that we invented, so we had to go gather up our greatest players, tell our amateurs to take a hike and prove that the United States doesn't take crap from anyone.

This doesn't apply as much to hockey, as I mentioned earlier, it isn't only the United States that's stacking their team. However, hockey does surpass basketball in one aspect. The NHL actually has to interrupt its season to take part in the Olympics, while the Olympics conveniently falls in the off-season for basketball.

But despite my objections to the NHL's decision, there still are some interesting aspects to having NHL players in the Olympics. Players who are teammates during the regular season will now find themselves on opposite sides of ice when they play for their respective countries. Or, on the opposite side, players who find themselves against each other in big NHL rivalries such as the Red Wings and Avalanche, will find themselves on the same team. It certainly makes for interesting happenings in the locker room.

Professional sports will continue to move in on the Olympic market and you will most likely see more and more dream teams in coming Olympic games. The amateurs will continue to have their dreams and goals shattered, and the Olympics will continue to become an economically driven event. However, many fans will enjoy seeing their favorite NHL stars going head-to-head in the biggest sporting event in the world. As for me, I'd much rather cheer for a bunch of young nobodies whose dreams of representing America would have come true in Japan.

looked like W&L was going to come out with a win, but with just 1:18 left on the clock, another Roanoke player, Jenn Sember, rocked a shot into goal from way outside the penalty area.

This time it was the Generals who would not give up. Freshman Lindsay Williams had a great chance off of a cross Reineke with just ten seconds left in the game, but it hit off the crossbar, forcing the game to go into overtime.

1:08 into overtime, Treese was fouled outside the penalty box. Her low shot around the left side of the wall beat Roanoke goalie Kate Enright to the near post, giving the Generals the overtime win.

This week, the Generals will try once again to defend their unbeaten record on Wednesday against Lynchburg at 4 p.m. and Saturday against Notre Dame of Maryland at 12 p.m. Both games will be on the Liberty Hall Fields and promise to be entertaining.

Binge Drinking: it's time to stop

Binge drinking — it's almost a buzz word these days. The kind of drinking defined as more than five drinks on one or more occasions in two weeks.

Alcohol-related admissions to the infirmary have more than doubled this year. That's right, 28 students have spent the night recovering in the student health center. Last year, after homecoming, only 10 students had been admitted.

So far this school-year, at Louisiana State University, and then at Massachusetts Institute of Technology students died from binge drinking.

It could never happen here. We've heard it said a thousand times, this school is too small, BYOB is working, students here are educated about the dangers of binge drinking and yet ...

Every weekend students drink beyond their limits, beyond the buzz. The amount of alcohol a person consumes shouldn't give him or her bragging rights, but at this school, it is a common Monday-morning conversation.

It's okay to have a few drinks, enough to loosen inhibitions, dance wildly and flirt fantastically.

But you can always stop. That's right, turn down the last beer, start to sober up as the night wears on.

The benefits are amazing, you'll wake up with a clear head the next day. No hangover, no reason to stay in bed past noon.

Recalling how you ended up in bed will be much easier. Recalling who you ended up in bed with will be much easier. You'll even be able to relate stories about your friends.

Most of all, you won't take that one drink that puts you over the edge. The one last drink that puts you in a coma. The kind of coma that looks a lot like sleep.

A sleep you never wake up from.

WLUR almost a real college radio station

I was surprised to hear a song by Less Than Jake on WLUR Monday morning. I was even more surprised when a punk cover of the "Cheers" theme followed it, and I was shocked when a ska cover followed that.

Red Brick Row

David Balsley '99

I nearly cried, I was so happy.

I have been a fan of college radio since I was a freshman in high school. I enjoy listening to different styles of music, and college radio has always been the place to find something different. WRCT (Carnegie Mellon University) and WPTS (University of Pittsburgh), whose playlists ranged from classical to punk to ska to Crazy Sid's Screaming Accordion Death Metal, provided me with a badly needed alternative to the dreary world of classic rock and pop radio.

So I was excited when I found that WLUR is starting to sound more like what I had heard at home. Like WRCT and WPTS, WLUR seems to be incorporating more variety into its playlist. Their Fall term broadcast schedule includes a few ska shows, and I have been told that their required playlist includes a number of modern, aggressive bands.

The injection of ska and punk into WLUR's playlist does not please me as much as the transition to playing lesser-known styles of music by lesser-known bands.

It is important for college radio stations to play this music because they are the few who can get away with it. Other stations depend on advertising revenue and must play their most popular songs in order to attract a wide audience. Even commercial stations which promote themselves as being different or "alternative" are just pop stations in disguise. Only independent stations can offer a true alternative from mainstream radio.

College radio stations should take advantage of their independence, at least for the sake of variety, if not to promote talent, creativity and artistry. Independent stations provide opportunity: they offer their listeners an opportunity to hear bands they have never heard before, and they give lesser-known groups the opportunity to be heard. It is important for them to fulfill this role.

But few students in Lexington can tune into classic rock and mainstream stations. So WLUR should play those styles as well. But they should not sacrifice all of a progressive playlist for songs which students may better recognize. As a college station, they should continue to provide an alternative.

What does this mean for WLUR? I hope that the station will continue to incorporate less mainstream music into its playlist. I have enjoyed the move to different kinds of music, and I hope that the trend will continue.

With any luck, I'll get to cry every Monday morning.

Letter to The Ring-tum Phi

The recent editorial concerning the possibility of a "Road-cheese Homecoming Queen" displays a tremendous amount of jealousy and ignorance on the part of the writer. This attitude is not unique to her, of course, but that certainly doesn't make it right.

As a brother in Sigma Nu, the fraternity that "nominated 'road cheese' this year" (yes, we "know who (we are)") I am more than a little upset to see our nominee attacked by someone who apparently cares more about where our nominee goes to school than the kind of person she is. I'm sure I've never heard HER take such a surly, nasty, and catty attitude about a W&L woman. Why can't the writer return the courtesy?

Sweet Briar women have been around W&L since 1901. That's about 85 years longer than W&L women (or "girls" if you prefer). If anyone has a right to be here, the road-school women do. Why does their very presence bother the writer so much? Perhaps SHE's the one who is intimidated by the "attractive and nice" women from the all-women's colleges.

The simple fact that a woman attends this University does NOT entitle her to guaranteed dates with W&L men/boys. If a W&L woman isn't "able to get a Homecoming date," then she should really think about why that is. Maybe it's time for some changes.

If the author really believes that W&L boys are the whore-mongers that she portrays us as, then why is she upset that we don't always date our female classmates? I would think that she'd be glad to be delivered from the threat of having such terrible "boys" ask her on a date.

As for the date shortage that W&L women apparently face, there is a simple solution. I whole-heartedly advise the unsatisfied ladies of W&L to start road-tripping frequently. The men/boys of Hampden-Sydney, VMI, UVA, Tech and countless other colleges would no doubt be ecstatic to see "hundreds of attractive, friendly, intelligent women" descend upon their campus in search of dates. Besides, it will give them something to do other than constantly complaining.

- Chip Westerman

Women of your dreams may only be an hour away

Well, Homecoming Weekend has come and gone, and, amazingly, the sky didn't fall and the earth didn't stop spinning on its axis. I mean, these things should have happened. After all, a girl from a road school was nominated to be our Then there's the term "road cheese." It always makes me laugh to hear women who would be mortally offended by such terms as "honey," "babe" or "chick" refer to other women as "road cheese." It's always nice to see such solidarity among the women of the world.

Do intelligent women intimidate us? No. Amazingly, some intelligent women actually reside at places besides W&L. If you took the time to actually talk to some road school women, you might find that out. Of course, I realize it's much easier and safer to cling to stereotypes, like most intelligent women do.

Road school women have always been and will continue to be an integral part of the W&L community. Without them, plenty of fine young gentlemen, based on sheer numbers, would go dateless. If road school women are a part of the community, why can't we nominate them to be Homecoming Queen? Besides, it's up to the nominating groups to decide who they'll nominate. Most fraternities tend to nominate a steady girlfriend of a senior in the house, road school or not.

I have nothing against W&L women. I took one to Homecoming. Personally, I think if women here don't like the available pool of W&L men, they can always road trip themselves. I've heard Pi Beta Phi is having a mixer with Hampden-Sydney. The person of your dreams may not be anywhere on this campus, but he or she could be an hour's drive away. Go out and find them. And stop complaining.

That many students here, both white and black, are deeply distressed to constantly see it.

Even more important though, glorifying that flag, parading in Confederate uniforms and longing for the old South, will always represent a split in this nation. Had the South won, the home that every American knows would not exist. Our unity keeps this country strong, and it offends me when anyone would desire to break that bond.

I can imagine that, if Robert E. Lee were alive today, he would be greatly distressed to see W&L students glorifying the old South. It broke his heart to see the United States divided in two, but he could not fight against his own home and family. Yet, when the war ended, Lee devoted the rest of his life to establishing a school which would educate Southern men, helping to rebuild a war-torn country and insuring that they would learn from the past and never relive it.

To those who find happiness in glorifying the old South, ask yourself why. What are you really saying? Who are you offending? And how would Robert E. Lee, the essence of our beloved Washington and Lee University, respond? It is time to move on.

Old South not something to be glorified

I am a white female. Members of my father's family fought for the Confederacy. I have lived the majority of my life in the South, but I certainly don't have "Old Fashioned Southern Pride."

Don't get me wrong. I love the South. I think we're living in some of the most beautiful parts of this country. I'm excited at places such as Atlanta, Charlotte, Columbia, Houston, and Dallas are thriving cities, add-

Scarlet O'Hara only constituted a small percentage of the South's population. During this time, wealthy people owned human beings and treated them like livestock simply because they were black. Women were considered a step above property, as long as they were white and had family money. To preserve this glorious time, the South seceded from the Union, splitting this country in pieces for four years. Southern fighters had passion, but no resources to fulfill their desires. Thank God.

As a Southerner, I have no desire to see the old South "rise again," and it kills me to see people of our generation, who are from good families and are well educated, wanting to celebrate such a dismal past. It would be the equivalent of having students expressing German pride, saying, "sieg heil," waving swastika flags, and reenacting the goosestep.

Which brings me to another point: most people would be greatly offended if a Nazi flag was hanging in someone's room. Yet, if one person on this campus has a problem with the Confederate flag, he or she becomes an outcast. No matter how people may cherish that battle flag, it will always be a symbol of racism in this country, and I know ing to the economy and strength of this country. If I live in the South for my entire life, I wouldn't cry.

Yet, as I look around W&L, gazing upon all the Confederate flags and watching Civil War reenactments, I begin to wonder why anyone would glorify such a sad part of the South's history.

The Old South had no really advanced technology or industry; it survived on its cotton and tobacco. Most people lived meager existences; the Rhet Butlers and

Next week is midterms. But how should we deal with the all the stress induced by our cold-hearted professors?

I have no problem with exams. The only matter that offends me is having to actually take them. I study and review, but when it comes to the actual exam, whatever I just spent like a million hours learning seems to disappear. I can go into a test knowing every word in a reading, but when I apply the material I seem to remember nothing.

According to the Surgeon General, a complete lack of intelligible information is one of the major signs of undue stress caused by midterms.

To combat this problem I believe we should have a mandatory nap time for all students and professors from 1-2 p.m., like the ones we had in kindergarten.

You know you need a break when your professors tell you to cool down. (True story.) Wednesday I turned in a paper five minutes late, and being the perfectionist that I am, I not only left the professor a note, but I also called to explain the situation. The reaction I received during the phone call was basically, "Andrea, chill." Rather than listening to my paper be torn to shreds, he calmly reassured me that everything was okay.

I suggest the following stress relievers: a free-full bar in the Cop, or naked yoga on the Colonnade. What could be more relaxing than laying on the front lawn toasted while doing deep breathing exercises?

Other sources of stress relievers might be games of pin the tail on the professor and ritual burning of textbooks. I think large baseball bats should be handed out to all students so they can beat computers mercilessly when they will not let you in.

I guess the way to solve the problem is to add another 12 hours to every day. Well, do something. There should be a law. Maybe this could be a nationwide campaign to try and get more down time.

Just keep screaming to yourself: IF I GET THROUGH THIS WEEK, I WILL NOT BE STRESSED. I WILL BE CALM. I WILL NOT RAMBLE ABOUT MY PROBLEMS. I MIGHT BE TAKEN TO THE ROCKBRIDGE MENTAL HEALTH CLINIC, BUT I WILL SURVIVE!!! SERENITY NOW!!!

TIPS FOR REDUCING STRESS

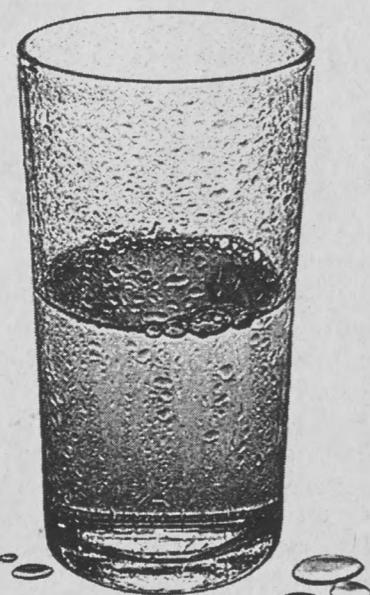

- 1) Make voo-doo dolls resembling your professors.
- 2) Decapitate all your stuffed animals.
- 3) Make ritual sacrifices to Cyrus McCormick.
- 4) Tear out and shred every third page of your Russian textbook.
- 5) Climb to the top of Washington Hall and "play" sniper
