'We need...a renewal of optimism... also a wiser perspective of history'

Justice Powell addresses Lee's Birthday-ODK Convocation.

March 1974

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr., delivered the following address on Jan. 21 at the Lee's Birthday-Founders' Day Convocation, which coincided with the annual Omicron Delta Kappa "tapping" ceremonies. Justice Powell earned both his undergraduate and law degrees from Washington and Lee and has been a member of the University Board of Trustees since 1961.

We meet this morning for two purposes: to honor the founding fathers of this University, and especially General Lee whose birthday [Jan. 19] was so recent. We are also here to recognize the role of Omicron Delta Kappa, as it "taps" the campus leaders whom it honors by membership. The faculty and students of W&L have long derived hope and inspiration from our founders, and ODK has contributed significantly to the W&L tradition of training men for leadership roles in society.

It will not surprise you for me to repeat the cliché that there has never been a time when we in this country had a greater need for hope, inspiration, and leadership. We all have reason to believe this. Yet in the long run, the type of society in which you and your families will live will depend in large part on our response to the convergence of national and world problems which now seem so acute.

Handwringing, pessimism, recrimination, and despair—though quite the mood among many today—will solve few problems and should be rejected as a national frame of mind. We need, rather, a renewal of the optimism and faith in our country that have been characteristic of Americans since Colonial times. We also need a wiser perspective of history.

It must be remembered that no nation, not even America, has a history free from periods of the gravest problems. There have been wars, revolutions, cataclysmic natural disasters, plagues, and economic depressions. Nations have risen and fallen, and indeed no nation has survived as such indefinitely.

In view of the occasion which brings us together, it may be appropriate to take a closer look at one period in the history of this country which—certainly for many people—must have been viewed with total hopelessness. I refer to the weeks and months after the surrender of the Confederate forces at Appomattox and to the reconstruction years which followed.

General Lee returned to Richmond, where his family lived in a rented house which had survived the burning of much of the city. Dr. Douglas Freeman, who wrote the definitive biography of Robert E. Lee, described conditions in Richmond at that time: the agonized city was close to chaos. The old government and the familiar landmarks were gone. Confederate money was worthless, and no one had any United States currency.

Indeed, few families had provisions of any kind. In the fire of April 2 and 3, the public supplies of the Confederacy and the stocks of the principal stores had been destroyed or looted. No trains were running, and the mail system had been wiped out. Only one newspaper was being printed and that one, the Whig, was scorned by the citizens because in the fading days of the Confederate cause, it had “turned coat” and come out for the Yankees.

These conditions, although perhaps more acute in the capital city so recently under siege, were by no means unique. Generally similar conditions, especially with respect to economic chaos, pervaded the entire South. And as vindictive politicians gained temporary control in Washington, and the harsh sanctions of reconstruction were imposed on a wrecked economy, the South was almost an economic wasteland for many years.

It is profoundly heartening to recall what General Lee did. He was far too perceptive not to comprehend the basic problems of reuniting a nation torn by four years of perhaps the bloodiest civil war in history. He knew perfectly well that ultimate hope lay in reconciliation. He also knew that Virginia and the South needed leadership; leadership which would nurture hope as well as cooperate with patriotic men in the North who also recognized that the war had been fought to reunite—not to subjugate—the Southern states.

The pressures on General Lee understandably came from many sources. Old friends with whom he had attended West Point and served in the United States Army, including General Mead, who made a special visit to Richmond for the purpose, importuned Lee to take immediately the oath of allegiance to the federal government. Lee’s response was typical. He recognized the United States as the only established authority, but would not change his own status as a paroled prisoner of war until he knew the attitude of the government toward other Southern parolees.

He was urged by some to go to England, where he would have been warmly welcomed, and many old comrades—bitter and unwilling to face the debacle in the South—urged that he go elsewhere. In a letter to General Beauregard, General Lee wrote:

“I am glad [you have no] intention to leave the country. I think the South requires the aid of her sons now more than at any period in her history . . . I have no thought of abandoning her . . .”

This, he did not do.

General Lee also resisted a lucrative offer to write his war memoirs, saying he would not profit by the tragedy of civil war. Rather, he chose to accept a meager offer from Washington College to become its President, saying:

“I think it is the duty of every citizen, in the present condition of the country, to do all in his power to aid in the restoration of peace and harmony . . .”

In presenting this brief summary of conditions following the Civil War, I do not suggest that the causes for concern today are necessarily parallel. The consequences of the ravages of war, the short-sighted policies of reconstruction, and the impact of the Industrial Revolution on an economy wholly unprepared for it, depressed and retarded opportunity in the South for half a century.

I have used the Civil War and its aftermath to emphasize a lesson of history: that it is the lot of mankind to undergo trials and tribulations, to suffer periods—sometimes extended ones—that do indeed try the souls of men. I have mentioned General Lee’s response to such a period because of his incomparable example of resolve and steadfastness at a time of dark adversity.

We now confront, as your generation faces the future, another period of grave problems. Despite talks of peace and detente, the danger of international discord and even violence is ever present; and, more recently, there is the energy crisis and the spectre of uncontrollable inflation. In addition to these worldwide problems, the fabric of our own national unity has been torn by the Vietnam War, and confidence in government itself shaken by recent events. No thoughtful person can view with complacency these threats to peace, stability and prosperity.

It would be equally short-sighted, however, to assume that the problems are insoluble—that chaos is inevitable. If this sort of fatalism sets in, if the public generally and our young people in particular think nothing can be done, or if we leave solutions to others and feel no personal responsibility ourselves, then indeed we may deserve the worst.

It is here that a sense of history is so essential. We must remind ourselves and others that few generations in all of history have been without their dark periods. It is in times such as these that we also need faith—faith in God as we individually perceive Him, faith in ourselves and our institutions, and faith in our country.

There is certainly a marked erosion of faith in our country. To be sure, this is a difficult time to believe in one's country. Every tenth grader can give you a bill of particulars of our mistakes and of what is wrong with America. The theme is a familiar one, often repeated in varying degrees in public and private: our democracy is a sham, our system is repressive of liberty, most politicians are untrustworthy, and America is a selfish, materialistic, racist society—with unworthy goals and warped priorities.

In my view, this is a self-indictment which greatly exaggerates—and even distorts—the truth about our country. In a sense, we are the victim of our own propensity for exaggeration in self criticism as well as in overstating our virtues in happier times. There is an urgent need for balance and restraint by all of us, whether in public or private life.

Again, I emphasize the need also of a proper perspective of history. Among its lessons is the certainty that man's weaknesses and imperfections are not uniquely of this generation, but of all time. The same of course is true of man's institutions. But without condoning any misconduct or shortcomings of the past or present, I think a strong case can be made for the view that the history of this country, on balance, is a proud and decent one.

We have had a consistent vision, since the Declaration of Independence, of a society in which all men can live in self-respect, participate freely in self-government, and pursue responsibly their own aspirations. To be sure, there have been sorrowful deviations from this vision, especially in racial injustice. Yet, at the threshold of 1974, no one can fairly question the present national commitment to assure full equality and justice.

Among the specific charges most frequently made against our country is that it is repressive, especially with respect to First Amendment rights and criminal justice. I recently heard a widely known American writer sarcastically attacking as sham and pretense our professed dedication to the Bill of Rights, and especially First Amendment rights. I will only say that if there is another country and a system of law which more zealously preserve freedom of press and speech than ours, no one has yet identified it.

As for those who repetitively assert that our criminal justice system is unfair and repressive, the most charitable thing that can be said is that they are uninformed. Former California Chief Justice Roger J. Traynor, one of our greatest jurists, has responded this way:

“It is irresponsible to echo [the] demagogic nonsense . . . that one group or another in this country cannot get a fair trial. . . . No country in the world has done more to ensure fair trials.”

The antecedents of our dedication to due process of law are deeply rooted. They go back to Magna Carta, the Virginia Declaration of Rights, and the Bill of Rights of the Constitution. They have been expanded and amplified by the Court upon which I sit. Indeed, safeguarding the liberties derived from them is our first responsibility, and may it ever be so.

It is fair to say, I think, that we have kept the faith with these noble antecedents. This is not to suggest that injustice and arbitrary action have wholly disappeared. There will never be such a utopian society. Yet, the trend and the balance are favorable. We enjoy in America not just economic opportunities but liberties—protected by the rule of law—that are the envy of mankind. With a system derived from the common law and the great English charters of liberty, the ideal of individual freedom has been preserved in the English speaking countries more fully and for perhaps the longest sustained period in all history.

Our foreign policy also is attacked as imperialistic and even as immoral. Whatever mistakes have been made over the years—and certainly they are not inconsequential—it can be said with truth that no powerful country, victor in major wars, has sought less for itself or taken less from other nations and people than the United States of America. We have initiated no war of aggression, certainly not in this century. Nor has any other country in all history shared its skills and material resources more generously with other countries and peoples, including those conquered, than the America which now is so frequently denigrated by her own citizens.

Whatever the faults and problems of our country and system may be, the essential structure of our democracy and freedom under the rule of law gives hope for the future and is worth struggling to preserve. If one has doubts, let him reflect upon the most likely alternative: the fascist or communist type of totalitarian regime, where—as Solzhenitsyn has written so poignantly—repression is always a brooding omnipresence and not just a slogan.

But no democratic system, however soundly conceived, can be preserved without citizen leadership and active citizen participation. Democracy is not a spectator sport. The grave problems which do indeed confront our people cannot be met and ultimately overcome without participating and responsible citizenship. It is here that Washington and Lee—with assistance from Omicron Delta Kappa—has contributed so much.

Few universities or colleges of anywhere near comparable size have succeeded over the decades in inspiring so well their students to assume the duties as well as the privileges of citizenship. This is no time for spectators on the sidelines. It is certainly no time for undue pessimism and continued self-flagellation. Rather, as in another era of doubt and misgivings, this is a time to follow the example of Robert E. Lee.

ODK honors 20 students, three alumni, and a Lexington business leader

Three outstanding alumni, a Lexington business leader, and 20 Washington and Lee students were initiated as members of Omicron Delta Kappa at "tap day" ceremonies on Jan. 21. The event was combined with the Lee's Birthday-Founders' Day Convocation at which Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr., was the speaker.

The honorary alumni members were:

Virginia Del. Lewis A. McMurrin, Class of 1936, chairman of Virginia's Bicentennial Commission and also chairman of the Jamestown Foundation. He represents Newport News in the Virginia House of Delegates. McMurrin could not be present for the ceremony and was "tapped" in absentia.

T. Hal Clarke of Atlanta, a 1938 law graduate, a prominent attorney and a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank. He is vice president of the Alumni Board of Directors and has been chairman of the Corporation, Banking, and Business Law section of the American Bar Association and of the ABA Committee on Savings Associations and Building Societies. He has been an FHLB member since 1969.

publisher and general manager of the Lynchburg News and Advance. His brother, Thomas Glass, a 1949 graduate, is co-publisher and executive editor of the Lynchburg papers. The Powell family and the newspapers have been generous benefactors of W&L.

The Lexington industrialist honored was Richard C. Emrey, an alumnus of Lehigh University. He is executive vice president of Burlington Industries and general manager of the corporation's James Lees Carpet plant in Glasgow, near Lexington. He became director of manufacturing at Lees in 1966 and is active in business and civic organizations in the area.

The students "tapped" were G. W. Austin, III, of Virginia Beach, B. L. Bailey of Parkersburg, W. Va., J. H. Beaty, Jr. of Memphis, Tenn., W. T. Brotherton of Charleston, W. Va., J. M. Costan of Lynchburg, L. H. Framme of Lexington, M. Guroian of Stamford, Conn., J. F. Hanzel of Lexington, P. J. Lancaster of Dunkirk, N. Y., R. M. Lamb, III, of Lexington, T. B. Long, III, of Cape Charles, Va., J. L. Nalley, Jr., of College Park, Ga., R. G. Piranian of Oreland, Pa., T. B. Ramey, III, of Tyler, Tex., H. R. Rubenstein of Shreveport, La., M. E. Stein, Jr., of Jacksonville, Fla., D. M. Thomas of New York City, R. P. Trice, II, of Richmond, W. P. Wallace, Jr., of Roanoke, and B. H. Wood of Lynchburg.

Lewis F. Powell, III, a W&L senior and son of Justice Powell, presided at the "tap" ceremonies. He is president of the W&L ODK chapter. Both Powells were elected to ODK membership while officers of the student body at W&L — Justice Powell in 1929 as president, and Lewis, III, last year as student body secretary.

Pooled Income Fund is now in operation, it's a new way to help W&L's future needs

The Washington and Lee Pooled Income Fund is now in operation, offering alumni and friends a new and satisfying way of helping the University meet its future financial requirements.

Participation in the Fund enables a donor to make a gift of capital to the University, continue to receive income from it for himself or his family, and often reap substantial tax savings.

At this writing, three generous gifts have been received by the University under the Pooled Income Fund arrangement. These gifts form a solid base for its operation.

The Estate Planning Council, headed by Martin P. Burks, '32, of Roanoke, Va., general counsel of the Norfolk & Western Railway, conceived the Fund and worked out its details at a meeting in Lexington last fall. The Council—a body of 44 alumni volunteers from across the country who are providing leadership for the University's program of encouraging alumni and friends to include Washington and Lee in their long-range financial planning—presented its recommendations to the University Board of Trustees. The Board authorized establishment of the Fund, and the University has engaged United Virginia Bank of Richmond, an institution with an outstanding record of success in the management of investments, to act as trustee of the Fund.

"We are happy to announce establishment of the Fund," Burks said. "It meets a long-standing objective. The Fund increases the University's ability to serve its friends who desire assistance in arranging their financial future to the best advantage and who at the same time wish to help secure the financial future of Washington and Lee."

How does the Washington and Lee Pooled Income Fund work? Why is it a good method of making a gift to Washington and Lee? Why did the University establish the Fund?

Edward O. Henneman, associate director of development and director of deferred giving at W&L and a specialist in estate planning, answered these questions.

"The pooled income fund," he said, "is a very simple way for an alumnus or friend of Washington and Lee to invest in the University's future without sacrificing his own or his family's need for income. By contributing to Washington and Lee through the Fund, the donor may obtain professional management and investment of the donated funds, provide a current income for himself or his family, make a gift of capital to the University to take effect in the future, and often obtain significant savings in taxes."

All gifts made to the University through the Fund are received by the trustee, the United Virginia Bank, which mingles them and invests them in a common pool. This procedure enables each donor to secure efficiency and economy in investment and management which should mean a higher return to him and a greater potential for growth in the value of the donated property.

The donor, or if he prefers another person or other persons designated by him at the time of his gift, receives a proportionate share of the income earned by the Fund each year.

Upon the death of the donor or the death of his designated beneficiaries, the principal amount represented by the donor's gift is withdrawn from the Fund and becomes the property of Washington and Lee. Again, depending on the investment performance of the Fund, this amount can be of far greater value than the original gift. When the property is transferred to the University by the trustee, the assets may be used in the discretion of the Board of Trustees to meet needs that seem most pressing at the time, added to endowment, or applied to a specific purpose stipulated by the donor at the time of the gift, such as a named scholarship fund, faculty salaries, or a named memorial gift.

The advantages to the University of being able to anticipate the receipt of the proceeds of gifts made through the Pooled Income Fund are obvious. The University receives a large measure of financial security, carrying with it assurance that it can maintain its excellence, to say nothing of enabling it to meet ever increasing costs and new and challenging needs for additional endowment and spendable capital funds.

Many alumni are helping to meet these needs through outright gifts of capital for development program objectives and through annual giving for current operations. But many other alumni who want to take part in this work of building a greater

Washington and Lee feel they are unable to reduce their present incomes because of family or other responsibilities. Some others, looking ahead to retirement, fear the consequences of parting now with a substantial amount of capital. The Washington and Lee Pooled Income Fund provides a means by which such donors can support the University and do so to a far greater extent than they may have thought possible. Two examples illustrate how this can work under present tax laws:

EXAMPLE 1

An alumnus, aged 63, wishes to create a scholarship fund of $80,000. He owns stock with a value of $80,000 that cost him $40,000 when acquired some years ago. His top income tax brackets average 40%, and his present dividend income on the stock is $1,600 annually. He gives the stock to Washington and Lee for inclusion in the pooled income fund and directs that the income earned by his gift be paid to him until his death at which time the capital will pass to Washington and Lee to form the scholarship fund.

The donor may deduct from his income tax as a charitable contribution the value of the gift interest given to Washington and Lee. In this case the deduction would amount to $39,236. In the donor's income tax bracket, this gives him a tax saving of $15,694, thus reducing the cost to him of his gift to $64,306. In addition, no capital gains tax is payable on the appreciation in value of the donated stock. The saving of this

Ned Henneman, Ready to Serve You

Edward O. (Ned) Henneman, associate director of development and director of deferred giving at W&L, is a native of New York City, whose parents now live in Dillwyn, Va. He is a soft-spoken man of puckish humor, and a conscientious lawyer, a specialist in the legal intricacies of taxation, trusts, estates, and the like.

He came to W&L in 1972 from New York, where he was an associate in the law firm of Winthrop, Stimson, Putnam & Roberts for nearly eight years. He was previously associated for two and a half years with the New York law firm of Kelley Drye Newhall Maginnes & Warren, which he joined in 1962 after receiving his J. D. degree from Harvard Law School. He earned his B.A. degree in English from Yale University in 1959.

Since coming to Washington and Lee, he has worked closely with the Estate Planning Council in developing a wide range of programs designed to provide tax-saving methods of giving to the University, including pooled-income and other trust and estate arrangements.

He is married to the former Penelope Case, a graduate of Smith College, and they have one daughter and two sons.

tax, which would have amounted to $10,000 had the stock been sold, further reduces the cost of his gift to $54,306. If the fund produces a yield of, say, 5½%, the donor will receive annual income of about $4,400, an increase of $2,800. Based on the net cost to him after his tax saving, this is an actual yield of 8.1%.

EXAMPLE 2

A donor, aged 70, wishes to give Washington and Lee $20,000 for its general purposes, but also to provide income for himself and his wife, 65. He makes his gift to the pooled income fund, directing that income be paid to him and then to his wife with the principal passing to Washington and Lee after the death of the survivor. He donates securities now worth $20,000 which cost him $5,000 and have a present yield of $600. His top tax brackets average 50%.

The donor's income tax deduction will be $7,645, a saving, in his tax bracket, of $3,823. His saving of capital gains tax is $3,750. His total tax saving therefore reduces the actual cost to him of his gift to $12,427. Again assuming a return of 5½%, the donor or his wife will receive annual income of $1,100, an increase of $500 over their present income. Based on the net cost to him of his gift, after taking account of his tax savings, this is an actual yield to him of 8.8%.

Holton is off to new Washington job, grateful for his W&L experience

In January, Linwood Holton, Jr., '44, completed a four-year term as Governor of Virginia. In February, President Nixon appointed him to the post of Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Affairs, making him the State Department's chief liaison with Congress on matters affecting foreign policy. Shortly before the public announcement of his appointment, Holton talked with the editors of W&L at his home in Roanoke on a wide range of subjects. The following article was condensed from that two-hour conversation.

How does he view the transition from chief executive of an important state to an important administrative post in Washington?

He sees it as a thrilling and challenging opportunity to enter a new dimension of public service—"to move to the very top of the foreign policy decision-making process at a most important time in history, a time when we really, for once, have a true opportunity for lasting peace." He particularly looks forward to working with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, who he believes is "unique in history" because of his background, temperament, training, and talent—a man who is "inherently more aware than the average person of the value of freedom in a peaceful situation." He believes Dr. Kissinger is the only Secretary of State who "has had the formal training directed specifically toward the issue: How do you maintain peace in this kind of world?"

Does he as a member of a Republican administration expect difficulties in working with a Democratic Congress?

Although he is a strong advocate of the two-party system as the most effective system of electing the best-qualified people to public office, he believes that, once elections are over, elected officials can be persuaded to work for the common good. "It is very difficult, understandably, to convince people who have responsibilities to varying constituencies across the nation of a common course, but I did it on a much smaller scale with the Virginia General Assembly, and I was able to surmount any obstacle that might have existed because of party differences. . . . I think the same approach can be effective with the U. S. Congress in support of foreign policy positions that will be developed."

Does he have any misgivings about the course our foreign policy has been taking?

"No. I am not a foreign policy specialist. That's not what I am being asked to do for the State Department. I am a politician. I am being asked to handle politics, really."

What will be his approach to the job?

He will adhere to the principles of checks and balances inherent in the Constitution. "The Congress was set up to provide a check on proposals of the executive branch of government, and the executive has a similar responsibility. So my job will be to reconcile the views of people who have, inherently and constitutionally, a responsibility to pick apart the other's position if he can. If the executive proposes something that has holes in it, then it is the job of Congress to find that out. In my role as a liaison man between a part of the executive branch and the Congress, I will either show Congress that we don't have holes in the proposals, or if they show us the proposals do have holes, take them back to the executive branch and eliminate the holes."

Did he enjoy being Governor of Virginia?

"Yes, I enjoyed the responsibilities of it and the challenges of it. My family and I were able actually to enjoy being there as well as to enjoy the judgment making responsibility, which of course is thrilling in itself."

What was the greatest satisfaction of the job?

"You can't pick out a superlative in a job like that except in a very abstract way. The greatest satisfactions came from being in a position to make decisions in many areas that were helpful to people as a matter of government service." He cited as examples the moves during his administration to clean up the state's rivers and the vastly improved programs of care and treatment of the aging. But in the broad range of service that Virginia's government provides, there are many sources of satisfaction in being Governor, and "then you have to realize what a great job it is, what a challenging job it is, and what an inspiring job it is."

What about disappointments?

"Disappointment is a word that doesn't fit into my thinking because I am not a pessimist. I think that the things you fail to get done are really postponements." He mentioned delays in combining some of the state's transportation resources into a department of transportation, the failure of the General Assembly to increase the individual income tax to 6 per cent, and continuing problems in the field of corrections. "It is important that people recognize the need to emphasize corrections because more than 95 per cent of all the prisoners we send into the penal system get out and return to society. . . . We must use the period when inmates are in prison to make a maximum effort to see that they return to society in condition to be self-supporting citizens and not menaces to their fellow citizens."

Was being Governor the fulfillment of a personal ambition?

"Yes, it was. I go back to childhood on that ambition." As a child he distributed leaflets for a councilman in his hometown of Big Stone Gap, and he recalls his fascination with Presidential elections. His first real shock in politics was when the Literary Digest prediction was upset in the Presidential election of 1936. His interest was reinforced while he was a student at Washington and Lee, where he met Gov. Colgate Darden, who spoke at a University convocation, and to whom he was introduced by Dr. Francis P. Gaines. "I remember how impressed I was at meeting the Governor of Virginia, a man whom I came to admire very, very strongly. Holton has remarked frequently that every Virginia Governor "has to have a 'Governor' of his own," an elder statesman whom he can consult on tough political and procedural problems. "It is an interesting little twist—after I became Governor, I saw Colgate Darden as my 'Governor.' It goes back to that spot just outside the Lee Dormitory where I met him in 1942."

What about his future political ambitions?

"Well, I don't think anybody who has ever run for an elective office can ever say that he has gotten it all out of his system." He noted that Sen. Harry

"Washington and Lee is and always has been an outstanding institution—outstanding from the standpoint of faculty and students. . . ."

F. Byrd Jr. is now a "very popular independent," who he wishes, if he stands for re-election in 1976, could run as either a Republican or a Democrat. As it is now, Holton said, Sen. Byrd has "no responsibility to a party or even to the two-party system in Virginia . . . And I must say that is something that gives me pause and makes me think about the future of that position." He noted that the other Senate seat is held by a member of his own Republican party, Sen. William Scott, and "I would be hesitant to suggest at this time that I might want to dislodge him from the nomination. That pretty well eliminates potentials for elective office at this time, but again I emphasize now—these things are continually changing—that I just can't rule myself out of another effort at elective office at some time in the future."

What is his attitude now toward Virginia's ban on a Governor succeeding himself?

He felt upon going to Richmond that the ban should be reconsidered, but changed his mind because he saw that the one-term limit gives the Governor great independence in decision-making. "That comes," he said, "from being able to say and having it understood that the Governor has no political motive in what he is doing because he can't run again." He quoted Colgate Darden in this connection: "This is not a place where you finish things; this is where you begin things." And, he went on, "it does make your philosophical attitude toward the job a whole lot easier if you recognize that that is how it is."

Has the Republican party settled in Virginia?

He believes that the party has become a "permanent force in Virginia's political scene," pointing to the Republicans' hold on seven out of 10 seats in Congress and one of the U. S. Senate seats, while the Democrats have none in the Senate. "The Republicans are more palatable from a national standpoint to the average voter in Virginia than the national Democrats." He noted his own election, the first Republican Governor in modern times, and the election in 1973 of Governor Mills Godwin, running as a Republican. He conceded that it is more difficult for Republicans to break into the winning ranks in the General Assembly because of the popularity of many Democratic incumbents whom the voters know to be "not of the philosophy of the national Democratic party." And he is confident that the newly elected Republican Lieutenant Governor, John Dalton, will be elected Governor in 1977 and "you will gradually see a building in the General Assembly of Republican incumbents.”

How does he view the trend in Virginia of some candidates to run as independents?

He does not object to independent voters, but he does “frown upon candidates as independents” because it erodes the two-party system. “I have a serious interest in the permanent legacy to Virginia of a strong, competitive two-party democracy because, to me, that’s what has made the country work. Anytime anybody slipped a little bit, there was another powerful force that offered an alternative to the voter, and that must be maintained. Running as an independent doesn’t help either party. It may give you a fine representative, but more important than a single fine representative, in my judgment, is the integrity of the two-party system. It is the permanent competition that insures the best throughout all generations.”

Does he see the Republican party as the heir to the Byrd organization?

“No, you’ll never have machine politics in Virginia again. You’ve just got too many people voting. Machines can exist only in small electorates that can be controlled by a few key people like court clerks or constitutional officers.” Now with the Voting Rights Act, the ease of registration, and elimination of the poll tax, “you can’t have machines, and you will never be able to keep people away from the polls in Virginia again.”

Does he anticipate that Nelson Rockefeller will run for President in 1976, and will he be a part of that effort?

“I just don’t have any anticipation about that at all.” He admires Rockefeller and looks upon him as a good friend whom he believes is well qualified to be President. He explained that he did not support Rockefeller when he was in a contest with Richard Nixon because “I felt at that time Richard Nixon would be better, and I supported Nixon from early times, continually and very actively, and I don’t regret any of that.” Now he is joining the Nixon administration and expects to be there for one or two years, and I’m not going to anticipate questions about what I will do about 1976, although, obviously with my interest, I will more than likely be active on behalf of some candidate for President of the United States.”

What advice would he give young people contemplating going into politics today?

Start at the bottom and work up, performing a vital service along the way. “Go to those little meetings that are held periodically—those little mass meetings that don’t seem to amount to very much, but which really constitute the basic unit in the political party system. If you get into that drudgery part, ring the doorbells, and support the candidates, and get a man elected to the City Council, the Board of Supervisors, or the House of Delegates, then next time it will be you, and you will be elected to one of those jobs.” It can be a gratifying experience, and “you have the opportunity to be of service in a way that doesn’t exist in any other profession, except possibly the clergy. . . . It’s important that bright young people recognize this opportunity for service. The system depends on that.”

What of his first-hand experience with private education?

“Not many people realize this—and

I don’t know why it keeps being left out of my biography—but I also had some experience of my own in a public institution. I left Washington and Lee after being there only two years and went into the Navy B-12 program at the University of North Carolina. So one full academic year of my undergraduate degree came from a publicly supported institution.” He then returned to Washington and Lee to complete his undergraduate work and went on to Harvard, where he received his law degree.

What’s the special role of the private school? What has he seen first-hand at W&L that has contributed to himself and to the state?

“Excellence. Washington and Lee is and always has been an outstanding institution—outstanding from the standpoint of faculty and students. In talking about the role of the private college, I have to give the traditional answer by pointing out the excellence of schools like Washington and Lee, and I guess it has never been higher than it is right now.”

What are his views on the dual system of public and private education?

“The answer to that is competition.” However, he cautioned against direct government subsidies to private institutions, such as across-the-board scholarships to students, because it raises a strong risk of government control. He believes there is room for support by the state government of Virginia students who attend either public or private institutions, “but it should be based on the student’s needs.” He explained that “if you define the need broadly enough in your basic program, then you should enhance state-supported scholarship programs in a way that would benefit private as well as public institutions.”

“Those of us who have had some public service feel strongly about opportunities to do something for somebody else. It’s tremendous. . . .”

What influence has his experience at W&L had on his life and career?

He spoke first of the influence of the traditions of sacrifice, honor, and duty instilled into Washington and Lee by Generals Washington and Lee and the importance they attached to education. “More directly influencing my life were some of the leaders who were on campus when I was there. You should never single out an individual, I guess, but you just can’t keep from singling out Dean Frank Gilliam. He meant a great deal to me.” He recalled how willingly Dean Gilliam saw and advised students and his understanding of students’ problems, “working with him when I was a dormitory counselor, while I was president of the Interfraternity Council, president of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity.” He remembers Dean Gilliam’s gracious acquiescence and encouragement when he told him of his decision to go to Harvard Law School instead of the Washington and Lee Law School. “Receiving letters, which I still have, from Dean Gilliam about my marriage to the daughter of a family that he knew extremely well, having just recently received a hand-written note from Dean Gilliam about his feeling of admiration for my performance as Governor of Virginia—you feel that if these people put this kind of confidence in you, it has to have had something to do with whatever successes you have had.”

What about the influence of fellow students?

me. He was my dorm counselor. We have been very fast friends ever since. [Campbell is now editor of the Gainesville, Ga., Times.] Five or six Washington and Lee friends were at a party celebrating my 50th birthday in September at the Executive Mansion. It was arranged by my wife, who invited a kind of this-is-your-life cast of characters. I think I can remember them all, but I will probably omit somebody. There was Buzz Lee [Robert E. Lee] who was a little ahead of me. I met him after I was in the service, and he was an instructor at midshipman’s school when I was there, but I had known about him because he was a fraternity brother and left some tradition of his own at the Beta House. Bob Campbell was at that party. He was supposed to graduate in June of ’42 and did as a Phi Beta Kappa, as a matter of fact, and stayed for the summer, and we both took the same physics course preparatory to going into the Navy. He went in as a supply officer, and I saw him a time or two in the Pacific. Someone who was not at the party, but who was invited but couldn’t come because he was committed to a football team, was Edgar Shannon [President of the University of Virginia and a Trustee of Washington and Lee]. Edgar and I have been so close that our families have vacationed together at Wrightsville Beach every year since 1960 or a little before. He has a lot of girls and some of them are close to the ages of our two girls. Cy Young [former alumni secretary and a great W&L athlete] was there. Cy is the great spirit of Washington and Lee, and he has always been important to all of the generations who went through there while he was alumni secretary. Cy was out there dancing in the garden of the Executive Mansion, and I think that pretty well sums it up with respect to Cy. And another person whom I did not know as a student, but whose spirit of philanthropy and responsibility has been most impressive to me in the last two years, is Sydney Lewis [Class of 1940, benefactor, and Trustee of W&L], whom we came to know while we were in Richmond. The Lewises are an outstanding family. They got into some political hot water with some of my affluent conservative friends, but that’s because those friends don’t know Sydney and Frances. They are tops in their spirit of philanthropy, and they have been in a position to put material resources behind that spirit of a desire to help. They are great citizens of the Washington and Lee community. I have probably left out somebody because of the many associations I had at Washington and Lee, and many have continued through the years. I’m sure that’s always true when you go to a fine institution which is outstanding in the measure of its student body and what those students do after they graduate. Washington and Lee is second to none in that respect.”

Does he have any particular message for W&L alumni and students?

“No, I don’t try to articulate messages to people. I do encourage public service. If there is any message in my life so far—and my bridge at the moment is 50—it is in my years of public service, going back 30 years ago when I joined the Navy. The private sector just doesn’t have the challenge. That’s not to reflect on anybody in the private sector. It’s a question of personality, talent, and interest, but those of us who have had some public service feel strongly about the opportunities to do something for somebody else. It’s tremendous.”

Most freshmen prefer law and business, chose W&L for its excellent reputation

Almost 30 per cent of Washington and Lee's freshmen say they intend to become lawyers, with more than 18 per cent planning to enter business, according to the recently released results of a survey taken last fall among entering students at W&L by the American Council on Education.

The medical professions — physician or dentist — ran a close third at W&L last fall, with about 15 per cent indicating they plan a professional career in medicine.

More than three times as many W&L freshmen plan on a legal career as the national average — 29.9 per cent, as against 7.9 per cent among male freshmen throughout the country. The number at W&L who plan to enter business, 18.2 per cent, is only slightly above the national men's average, 17.8 per cent. But the number at W&L intending to enter the medical professions, 15.1 per cent, compares with a national men's average of 9.4 per cent.

After medicine, the fourth most frequently named career choice at W&L was research science, but with just 4.1 per cent of the freshman class indicating an intention to enter that field. (The national men's figure was 4.5 per cent.)

The Washington and Lee figures for both law and medicine showed slight declines from comparable figures among the previous year's entering class — law down by 4.1 per cent, medicine down by one-tenth of one per cent. Business and business management, however, increased by 2.5 per cent from 1972 to 1973, the ACE survey results showed.

The percentage at W&L describing themselves as politically "liberal" was almost the same as the national average — 33.4 per cent at Washington and Lee, 33.8 per cent among male freshmen at all four-year colleges. Washington and Lee had a larger proportion of students indicating they are "conservative," however, than the national men's average — 20.2 per cent at W&L, 16.3 per cent nationally.

Both at W&L and nationally, the largest single group by self-characterization were the "middle-of-the-roaders" — 43.5 per cent at Washington and Lee, 46.5 per cent nationally.

The ACE survey results showed that Washington and Lee draws its student body from a wider geographical area than the "average" four-year college. Of W&L freshmen, 89.2 per cent live more than 500 miles from Lexington. The average in the nation who went more than 100 miles was 49.4 per cent, and the average who went more than 500 miles was 14.9 per cent.

More than half of Washington and Lee's entering students had a B-plus average or better in high school — 54.3 per cent. Nationally, 36.6 per cent of male freshmen at four-year colleges had earned a B-plus average or better.

The parents of Washington and Lee's freshmen received more formal education than those of male freshmen at other colleges, the ACE survey reported. The proportions of W&L mothers and fathers holding college or graduate degrees are twice the national averages for parents — 65.4 per cent for W&L fathers, 42.9 per cent for W&L mothers, against national averages of 31.5 per cent for fathers of male freshmen nationally, 18.8 per cent for mothers.

More than four-fifths, 81.7 per cent, at Washington and Lee said the University's good academic reputation" was an important reason for selecting it as the college to attend.

C-School Alumni Lecture

Dr. Juanita Kreps, vice president of Duke University and professor of economics there, delivered on Feb. 21 the sixth annual Alumni Lecture on Public Affairs under the sponsorship of the School of Commerce, Economics, and Politics.

Dr. Kreps' topic was "Sex in the Marketplace: American Women at Work," drawing from the title of a book she wrote in 1971.

She surveyed comparative pay scales between men and women and found them higher for men. She reported a greater number of women moving into jobs and professions which were once dominated by males. Women, she pointed out, are being motivated to work outside the home not only because many families need a second income but also because many more women today find the opportunity to exercise their desire to make full use of their talents and education. She also said the trend could lead to a more equal sharing by men and women of the whole range of family responsibilities. But she conceded that there are many unanswered questions ahead and concluded: "I wonder how it will all turn out." Much will depend, she said, on the response of today's young men to the increasing competition of women in the marketplace.

Her husband, Clifton H. Kreps, Jr., is professor of banking at the University of North Carolina. She herself is a director of the New York Stock Exchange, Educational Testing Service, the National Merit Scholarship Corp., the J. C. Penney Co., and several other professional and public-service organizations.

The public affairs lectures at W&L are made possible by an endowment created by alumni of the School of Commerce, Economics, and Politics.

Black Culture Week

A worship service, lectures by outstanding visiting speakers, a musical program, a documentary film, and a formal dance were highlights of the third annual "Black Culture Week" at W&L in February.

The week-long series of events is sponsored by the University through the Student Association for Black Unity and is designed to promote mutual understanding and to provide insights into the experience of black Americans.

Theodore E. Thornton, Sr., director of personnel for the city of Richmond, delivered the annual Leslie D. Smith Memorial Lecture. Thornton was executive director of Richmond's Human Relations Commission before assuming his present position. Smith, for whom the lecture is named, was the first black graduate of W&L. He received his law degree in 1969 and died a year later in Washington, D. C., where he was an attorney for the U. S. Justice Department.

Dr. Wendell P. Russell, president of Virginia State College in Petersburg, delivered the other principal lecture of the week. Dr. Russell is a former dean of students and dean of the college at Virginia Union University.

The week began with a black worship service conducted by the Rev. Lutrelle Rainey, pastor of Lexington's First Baptist Church and an assistant dean of students at W&L.

The nationally known Virginia Union University Choir, under the direction of Dr. Odell Hobbs, presented a concert in Lee Chapel. The choir's repertoire ranges from 17th-century baroque to 20th-century gospel music.

The highly regarded documentary, King: Montgomery to Memphis, chronicling the life and death of Martin Luther King, was shown twice in Reid Hall.

The week concluded on Friday with the annual Black Ball, an invitational black-tie event, sponsored by the Student Association for Black Unity.

Gift to Print Shop

The Newport News Daily Press Inc., publishers of the Newport News (Va.) Press and Times-Herald, has made a major donation of typesetting equipment to the University's Journalism Laboratory Press.

Included in the gift were two complete Linotypes, the machines used to set text; a Ludlow headline-setting machine with 88 fonts of type; another machine for making column rules and decorative borders; and a substantial inventory of spare and replacement parts for much of the print shop's newly acquired and old machinery.

The donation by the Newport News newspapers represents more than $100,000 in value at new replacement costs. The papers agreed to give the machinery to the W&L print shop when the Press and Times-Herald converted from "hot type" (in which molten lead is used to cast single lines of type) to photographic "cold type" composition.

The Washington and Lee press uses hot type with only slight exceptions for the alumni magazine; the campus newspapers, the Ring-tum Phi and the Law News; the University's literary quarterly, Shenandoah; the student literary magazine, Ariel, and almost all other of Washington and Lee's on-campus printing needs such as brochures, posters and stationery.

The Newport News papers' donation of the typesetting machinery was arranged by Everett A. Martin, a W&L alumnus, who operates a commercial typesetting shop of his own in Norfolk.

The new equipment has enabled the Journalism Lab Press to replace two of its old Linotype machines and to set Ludlow headlines. Previously, headlines had to be hand set from foundry type. In addition, the Newport News equipment gives the print shop the capability for the first time to make its own column rules and borders. Until now these had to be purchased commercially.

Dr. Henry S. Roberts Dies at Age 60

Dr. Henry Stoutte Roberts, professor of biology and department head at Washington and Lee, died Feb. 21 in a Roanoke hospital at the age of 60. He had been ill since November.

Dr. Roberts was a widely known authority in the field of cytokinesis, the changes which occur in protoplasm during cell division.

He joined Washington and Lee's faculty in 1964, after 18 years at Duke University. At the time he left Duke for W&L he was director of graduate studies in zoology.

He is survived by his wife, Anne Houle Roberts, and by two sons, Henry S. Roberts, III, of Seattle and Frederick E. Roberts, a graduate student in divinity at Duke.

The family has suggested that friends who desire to honor Dr. Roberts' memory may wish to make a contribution to Washington and Lee for an audio-visual learning center in the biological sciences, a major interest of Dr. Roberts'.

He was the vigorous chairman of Washington and Lee's curriculum committee through the development of the University's massive new system of degree and course-credit requirements and the change in academic calendar to a school year of two long terms followed by a short spring term.

In 1971, he used a sabbatical leave to visit biology departments in prestigious liberal-arts colleges throughout the country, from New England to Oregon, permitting him to evaluate their programs and strengths in comparison with W&L's.

As biology head he reorganized the department's course offerings substantially. The year he arrived at W&L, the department offered 16 courses; it now offers 28, including an innovative series of six short advanced seminars. He also developed an arrangement with Duke's Marine Laboratory to permit W&L biology and chemistry students to study marine science there during the Spring Term.

Born in Macon, Ga., he was graduated with honors from Mercer University and received the Ph.D. in zoology from Duke. While a faculty member at Duke and Washington and Lee, he conducted research and served as a visiting lecturer at several institutions throughout the country, including the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, William and Mary, Bennett College and the University of Southern California.

Fancy Dress is back... and what a ball!

Opposite Page Top: More open-space fun at Zollman's. Cheek-to-cheek dancing was indeed back. A Fancy Dresser seems to say, "How sweet it is!" Opposite Below: Evans Hall was wall-to-wall people as the band played on.

It was almost like olden days—light years ago, back all the way to the 1930s, when Fancy Dress was king ("the outstanding collegiate social event in the South," The New York Times has said).

The students decorated the entire Evans Hall-Student Center complex in minute detail, even with a fountain and street signs—and it really did look like the French Quarter.

And 1,700 of them came, more by far than to any of the old-time Fancy Dresses. Some were in costume, but mostly in tuxes or suits, dates in evening gowns, which after all are costumes of a sort to college students these days. If there had been a prize, though, it would certainly have been won by Prof. B. S. Stephenson, '42 of the German department and his wife. He went in a clown's suit with a gorilla head, and the Swiss-born Mrs. Stephenson went as an exotic Spanish princess.

The word had spread that it was really going to be a phenomenal weekend; there were students from as far away as Southern Methodist University in Texas, and plenty from the University of Virginia, as there always were.

A phenomenal weekend it was. There were a hundred kegs of beer—18,000 glasses of it, for the statistically minded. (One part of a cupful ended up being poured on President Huntley's head by a date who didn't know, at the time, who he was. He turned to her, though, and said: "That happened the last time I wore tails too—in 1948.")

There were three bands—a hard-rock soul band, to be sure, but a great Dixieland group and a nightclub trio as well, each playing in a different part of the complex.

And when it was over, they had a difficult time of it getting everybody to go home. The students themselves were a little surprised at how well it went, at what a . . . well, ball they had.

The old-fashioned Fancy Dress Ball was the idea of the Student Activities Board's entertainment committee chairman, Doug Chase, a senior from Fredericksburg. Mike Brittin, the board chairman, gave the opinion it clicked because students seemed to be ready for something a little mystical in which they'd actually participate—something different from the same old rock and roll concert that lately has been the custom at colleges. (The swing back isn't just at Washington and Lee. "Big" weekends are returning all over; the National Observer even reported this winter that "Cheek-to-Cheek is Chic Again.")

Actually, Fancy Dress marked the return of the whole "Big Weekend." There were round-the-clock combos at fraternity houses and parties at Zollman's Pavillion, about five miles out in the country on Buffalo Creek. They figure that at one point on Saturday there were 2,000 people at Zollman's, which has become the favorite location for such huge student body parties. They danced, had a Frisbee marathon, sang "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" and "Dixie" and the "W&L Swing," rode a horse which was rather baffled by it all, and in truest W&L tradition did not fail to refresh themselves with the widest variety of concoctions.

And another ancient Washington and Lee tradition was resurrected back on campus: "Old George" was given his hundred-and-some-thingth coat of new paint, this time a bright blue. It was a group of Sigma Nus, as it turned out, abetted by their ladder-holding dates. One scaled the 30 feet or so from the base of the Washington Hall cupola by rope to give the 132-year-old statue its own Fancy Dress costume. It used to be routine, almost from the day the statue was hoisted up, for W&L students and V.M.I. cadets to paint it in dramatic colors, but the last time it was done was in the late 1950s. ("And 15 years is just about the right interval," President Huntley said afterward. Class of 1989 take note.)

Dr. Thomas is the recipient of the 1974 Lynchburg award

LYNCHBURG. The coveted Lynchburg Citation went this year to Dr. John Newton Thomas, a Trustee of W&L since 1938 and rector of the Board since 1970. The presentation was made at a dinner meeting of the chapter on Feb. 22 at the Holiday Inn, South.

The citation honors an alumnus for outstanding service and devotion to the University and is by tradition the highest distinction awarded by a W&L alumni chapter. The citation presented to Dr. Thomas said: "The aura of his life and personality reaches out to all who come within his sphere of influence with a warmth and love that is, at once, an extension of his own spirit and that of the Christ he serves with complete devotion."

Dr. Thomas retired in 1972 as professor of systematic theology at Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, after 32 years on its faculty, including seven years as dean of the graduate school. He is a 1924 graduate of W&L.

Before the presentation, Dr. Thomas reported on the financial status of the University and appealed for continued strong support by alumni. Robert C. Wood, III, '62, chapter president, introduced the guests including two Trustees and their wives, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Lewis of Richmond and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Leggett of Lynchburg, and University guests, President and Mrs. Robert E. R. Huntley, Prof. Rupert Latture, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Parsons, Mr. and Mrs. James Whitehead, Mr. and Mrs. William D. McHenry, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Washburn, and Robert S. Keefe. Dr. Sidney Coulling, professor of English, who was scheduled to speak could not be present because of the death of his mother. Besides Dr. Thomas, President Huntley and McHenry made remarks.

RICHMOND. W&L President Huntley and Sweet Briar President Harold B. Whiteman were guests of honor at a cocktail-buffet on Feb. 24 sponsored jointly by the W&L alumni chapter and the Richmond Sweet Briar Alumnae Club at the Holiday Inn on Robin Hood Road. Both presidents discussed some of the problems of independent higher education in Virginia, specifically as they relate to their respective institutions. After their talks, they answered questions. Sam C. Dudley, '58, president of the W&L chapter, introduced the presidents. Mrs. John McDonald, president of the Sweet Briar club, was co-chairman with Dudley in arranging the reception and buffet.

NEW ENGLAND. "Virginia Night" was the theme of a dinner-dance held by the New England chapter on Feb. 2 at the Boston Center for Adult Education. The event was arranged jointly by the local alumni groups of W&L, Sweet Briar, Hollins, Randolph-Macon, and Mary Washington, with the University of Virginia club in Boston as the chief sponsor. Among the W&L alumni who braved a heavy snowfall to attend were Fred Bent, '66L, Chip Chamberlin, '60, John Mynttinen, '66, Rob Todd, '60, and their wives. Those who attended expressed the hope that the cooperative meeting will result in similar annual events in the future.

Mrs. William D. McHenry, President Huntley, and Robert C. Wood, III, '62, applaud as Dr. Thomas acknowledges receipt of the Lynchburg Citation.

Mrs. Gaines Dies

It was learned as this magazine was going to press that Sadie DuVergne Robert Gaines, widow of Dr. Francis P. Gaines, president of the University from 1930 to 1959, died unexpectedly on March 11 in a Lexington Hospital. In her nearly three decades as W&L's "first lady," Mrs. Gaines entertained hundreds of visiting dignitaries and thousands of students in the Presidents Home. She was a gracious hostess, and she and Dr. Gaines for many years made it a point to have every W&L student as a guest in their home. Mrs. Gaines maintained a deep interest in Washington and Lee up to her death and continued to entertain her friends, new and old, in her Lexington home, which she and Dr. Gaines built after his retirement in 1959.

She was born in State College, Miss., where her father, Dr. J. C. Robert, was dean of Mississippi State College. It was there in 1917 that she married Dr.

Gaines, who was an English professor at the college. They came to Washington and Lee in 1930 from Wake Forest College of which Dr. Gaines was president.

She is survived by three sons, Dr. F. Pendleton Gaines, Jr., Dr. Edwin M. Gaines, and William R. Gaines, all alumni of W&L; and three brothers, Dr. Joseph Robert, Dr. Pierre Robert, and H. Cavett Robert, a '33 W&L alumnus, nine grandchildren, and nine nephews and nieces.

Commission. He retired from the active practice of law in 1945 to devote most of his time to citrus business.

1915

ANDREW WENDELL MANN, former city attorney and a leading criminal lawyer in Ashland, Ky., since 1919, died June 8, 1973. From 1925 until 1931, Mann served the city of Ashland as prosecutor. He was named corporation counsel in 1944 and held that post until his retirement in June, 1971. Toward the end of his service as corporation counsel, Mann had become the dean of municipal attorneys in Kentucky and had a far-ranging reputation in criminal law. He was honored in 1972 by the Ashland Board of City Commissioners.
