Commencement 1966

The 1966 Commencement processions marched under brilliant sunlight as the University conferred degrees on its largest June class in history—268 men, including forty-one from the School of Law.

President Cole's graduation remarks stressed the vital need for continued strength among the nation's undergraduate institutions, and the valedictory address by John M. Lewis of Martinsville, Va., was the shortest ever—less than a minute.

Mattingly Retires As University Treasurer

One of the University's Most Memorable Figures
Closes Out Forty-Nine
Years of Devoted Service
To Washington and Lee

EARL STANSBURY MATTINGLY, "Mr. Matt" to generations of Washington and Lee alumni and a member of Washington and Lee University's administrative staff for forty-nine years, retired July 1 as treasurer and secretary of the University.

Mattingly, whose tenure at Washington and Lee spanned the administrations of four presidents, will continue to serve the University as special adviser to President Cole.

The University's Board of Trustees, which accepted his notice of retirement with regret at its regular meeting in May, designated Mattingly as treasurer and secretary, emeritus.

First announcement of Mattingly's retirement was made by President Cole before the final general faculty meeting on June 2. President Cole said he would appoint a faculty committee to draft an appropriate resolution in honor of the retiring administrator.

President Cole added: "I know of no one who has been more loyal, more dedicated to the best interests of this University, and I know of no one who has been a greater friend to generation after generation of Washington and Lee men."

A native of Washington, D. C., Mattingly enrolled at Washington and Lee in 1916, following attendance at Randolph-Macon Academy at Front Royal, Virginia. It represented a late start on his college education, for Mattingly spent his early years working days and attending only night school, where he specialized in business studies.

From his first employment, Mattingly recalls, he has been involved with the handling of funds. He was a timekeeper and payroll clerk for a construction company, then a bill clerk and later office manager for a wholesale company, and later a bookkeeper and teller for a building and loan association.

His experience in building and loan negotiations helped bring him to Washington and Lee. Through a friend, Dr. Ernest Lee Woolf, Methodist pastor in Lexington in 1916, Mattingly learned of the possibility of part-time employment in the Washington and Lee Treasurer's office, which would permit him to work simultaneously toward his college degree.

Mattingly became a student assistant in the treasurer's office after his first year examinations at Washington and Lee. His experience and service were particularly valuable because all of the University's endowment at that time was invested in real estate loans.

Mattingly left college to serve in the medical corps and in field artillery officer's school during World War I, returning in January, 1919, to assume management of the University's dining hall. Later that year he renewed his work in the treasurer's office, and in 1920 he was appointed registrar of the University although he was still an undergraduate.

As registrar he continued to study part time, and in 1925 he qualified for his A.B. degree. He continued as registrar for twenty years until 1940 when he was appointed the University's first full-time treasurer and secretary.

An article in the University's alumni magazine recounted his work as registrar this way:

"The efficiency with which his office was carried on has become almost proverbial; his memory for students' names and faces is well-known to be amazing, while his popularity with them is deserved."

Mattingly recalls that he made a point to memorize the name, face, hometown, local address, and grades of every Washington and Lee student, about 600 to 700 yearly during the 1920's and 1930's.

In his work as treasurer, Mattingly helped guide the University through the difficult World War

II years when enrollment dwindled and the University turned over its facilities to the Army's School for Special Services. He represented the University in all negotiations and relationships with the government and Army. Later, when the war ended, he supervised the handling of government relations and funds in connection with the hundreds of veterans who enrolled under the "GI Bill of Rights."

A bachelor, Mattingly made Washington and Lee his major concern but not his exclusive interest. He was a charter member of the Lexington Kiwanis Club and a charter member of the Rockbridge Historical Society. He is a Mason and a Shriner.

Mattingly studied voice as a young man, and for many years he was in great demand as a soloist with church choirs and at weddings. He was one of the founders and first president of the Troubadours, Washington and Lee's dramatic club.

He served as a member of the first board of directors of Lexington's Stonewall Jackson Hospital, and he continues as a trustee of the Stonewall Jackson Memorial Cemetery. From 1958 to 1964 he was a trustee of Randolph-Macon Academy. He is former treasurer of Lexington's Robert E. Lee Memorial Episcopal Church, and continues as chairman of its board of trustees. He has served also several times as a member of the executive board of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia.

Mattingly is a member of Omicron Delta Kappa, national honorary leadership fraternity; Beta Gamma Sigma, national society recognizing achievement in business and commerce; and Phi Delta Theta social fraternity.

Retirement will work no major changes in his pattern of living, Mattingly says, for his role as presidential adviser will mean regular

The Board's Resolution

■ IN ACCEPTING Mr. Mattingly's retirement, the Board of Trustees adopted a resolution for inclusion in the official minutes of the Board. The resolution declared:

"Earl S. Mattingly has served Washington and Lee University with unequalled devotion and distinction for forty-nine years. His wise management and unswerving loyalty have been of inestimable value to the University. By this resolution the Board of Trustees, on behalf of its individual members and of the University, expresses its deep sense of appreciation for Mr. Mattingly's distinguished record of service and its gratification that his experience, wisdom, and friendship will continue to benefit the University, the president, and the members of the board in the years ahead."

At the Board's August meeting, Dr. Huston St. Clair, on behalf of his colleagues, directed Mr. Mattingly to sit for a special portrait which will be placed in Evans Dining Hall.

office hours for him. He can't recall ever having taken a real vacation from his work at Washington and Lee, although he did attend, as deputy, three meetings of the General Convention of the Episcopal Church.

His work and his great interest in the University has involved him in its routine at virtually every level. Some of his associates recount this story as typical of Mattingly's ability to apply himself simultaneously to many problems:

Former President Francis P. Gaines had summoned Mattingly to his office to receive transfer of a gift of a quarter of a million dollars from a University benefactor. While he and President Gaines were discussing the disposition of the large sum, Mattingly halted the discussion to call from the president's window to a campus worker below. With a six-figure check in one hand, Mattingly proceeded with the other to instruct the worker in the proper use of weed killer.

MR. MATTINGLY has always enjoyed to the fullest the variety of activities and events at the University. This photograph was taken several years ago during the Fancy Dress Ball.

Other Administrative Changes Follow Mr. Mattingly's Retirement

THE RETIREMENT of Earl S. Mattingly set in motion a series of administrative adjustments designed to assure continued efficiency in the University's administration. Some adjustments were directly related to Mattingly's area of former responsibility, while others were concerned with separate administrative functions.

In addition to the Treasurer's Office and the fiscal procedures of the University, other areas affected included the Board of Trustees, the College, the Registrar's office, the office of student financial aid, and general administrative activities now handled by an Office of University Services.

Changes and additions in personnel were accompanied by some reallocation of office space.

James W. Whitehead, Assistant to the President for Administration and Director of University Services, was named by the Board of Trustees to succeed Mr. Mattingly as University Treasurer, while continuing to serve as an assistant to President Cole.

Robert E. R. Huntley, '52, Professor of Law and the University's legal adviser, was chosen to assume Mr. Mattingly's responsibilities as Secretary to the Board of Trustees.

Andrew B. Varner, Assistant Treasurer, was promoted to Chief Accountant and Director of Financial Services.

Two other appointments to newly created administrative positions were announced by President Cole.

L. Vernon Snyder, '49, was named Director of University Services, a new job involving him in the direction of University purchasing and supplies, office and personnel services, student and faculty housing assignments, and supervision of the dining hall, supply store, and new paperback book store.

Dr. William J. Watt, Professor of Chemistry, was appointed Assistant Dean of the College and will work with Dean William W. Pusey, III, in the general administrative processes of the College.

The creation of the positions now filled by Snyder and Dean Watt was recommended in the course of the University's Self-Study, now approaching the conclusion of its two-year project.

The new titles and responsibilities were assumed by Mr. Whitehead, Mr. Huntley, and Mr. Varner, on July 1, while Mr. Snyder began his new duties on July 15 and Dr. Watt on August 1.

The previously announced appointment of Harold S. Head as University Registrar became effective July 1, as Head assumed the position held by Edwin H. Howard, who retired at the end of the 1965-66 academic year.

Also effective on August 1 was the appointment of Farris P. Hotchkiss, '58, as Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Financial Aid. Hotchkiss succeeds Lewis G.

John, '58, who has taken a two-year leave of absence to continue graduate study toward his doctorate at Syracuse University.

Physical adjustments necessary to accommodate the personnel changes involved complete interior remodeling of the small building located directly behind Washington and Robinson Halls. Constructed during World War II to serve as a dining hall for Army personnel attending special schools on the campus, the building has undergone a complete interior redesign to accommodate the Registrar's office as well as the University's computer center and machine records office.

When completed, the new facilities will provide greatly needed additional space for work of the Registrar's office, storage of official student records, expanded area for data processing equipment, and new quarters for the Model 1620 computer. The building will also contain a classroom for use by students studying computer programming, and it will have offices for the chairman of the faculty computer committee and the supervisor of data processing.

The Office of University Services has taken over office space on the first floor of Washington Hall formerly occupied by the Alumni Office, prior to its move to the new Alumni House. Mr. Mattingly has been relocated in the office formerly used by the Alumni Secretary, Successor to MR. MATTINGLY as Treasurer of the University is JAMES W. WHITEHEAD, who also will continue in his position of Assistant to the President. MR. WHITEHEAD joined the University staff in 1958 as Director of University Relations.

having vacated the Treasurer's office for occupancy by Mr. Whitehead.

In the Treasurer's Office, extensive remodeling was done to provide better functional organization and to provide for the addition of new bookkeeping and data processing equipment.

Dean Watt and Mr. Huntley will have offices on the second floor of Washington Hall, with Dean Hotchkiss occupying Dean John's former office there.

No plans have been announced for the use of space to be vacated by the Registrar's Office in the connecting wing between Washington and Payne Halls.

Biographical summaries of the administrators involved in the new adjustments follow:

James W. Whitehead

Mr. Whitehead, 44, is a native of Columbus, Ga. He joined the administration in 1958 after serving as director of public relations at the University of Tampa (1945-50), with the National Conference of Christians and Jews (1950-55) and as executive director of the Empire State Foundation of Independent Liberal Arts Colleges (1955-58).

He is a graduate of the University of Tampa, receiving a Bachelor of Science in business administration in 1942. He received the Doctor of Humane Letters degree from Tampa in 1954.

Whitehead served as an aviator with the U. S. Naval Reserve during World War II. His eldest son, James, Jr., is a junior at Washington and Lee this year.

Robert E. R. Huntley

Mr. Huntley, 37, is a native of Winston-Salem, N. C., and received his A.B. degree from Washington and Lee in 1950 and his LL.B. in 1957. He also holds the LL.M. from Harvard (1962). He was associated with the Alexandria law firm of Boothe, Dudley, Koontz, and Boothe for a year before joining the Washington and Lee faculty in 1958 as an assistant professor.

Mr. Huntley was promoted to associate professor in 1960 and to full professor in 1964. In 1963 he became legal advisor to the University.

Andrew B. Varner

Mr. Varner, 57, is a Lexington native. He is a graduate of Lexington High School and Templeton Business School. He has served thirty-eight years with the University, having been first appointed to the administration staff in 1928.

Varner is treasurer of Trinity Methodist Church in Lexington. His son, Andrew B. (Brocky) Jr., '56, is an engineer with Bell Laboratories in Winston-Salem, N. C.

L. Vernon Snyder

Snyder, 46, is a native of Buena Vista. He received his Bachelor of Science in commerce in 1949 from Washington and Lee, where he was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Eta Sigma honorary scholarship fraternities and Beta Gamma Sigma honorary commerce fraternity.

Before attending Washington and Lee, Snyder served four years in the U. S. Navy (1942-46) as a petty officer, first class. Following graduation he worked three years as internal auditor for the Prudential Insurance Co. and seven years as chief accountant and assistant secretary and treasurer of the Lexington Telephone Co. before his appointment to the Rockbridge County position in 1959.

A native of Carbondale, Ill., Dr. Watt, 40, joined the Washington and Lee faculty as assistant professor of chemistry in 1955. He had taught previously in the chemistry department at Davidson after graduation from the University of Illinois. He received his Master's and Ph.D. degrees from Cornell.

Dr. Watt has participated in the Robert E. Lee Research Program at Washington and Lee each year since its inception in 1960. He also has sponsored National Science Foundation research grants for Washington and Lee undergraduates. During the summers he has been a research participant at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory (1957-58), a visiting professor for an NSF Institute for High School Teachers at Alabama College (1959-60-61), an NSF research participant at the University of Virginia (1962) and visiting professor of chemistry there, (1964-65-66).

Farris P. Hotchkiss

Hotchkiss, 29, is a native of Richmond, and graduated in the class of 1958. He came to Washington and Lee this year from Atlanta where he was sales vice president of a printing, publishing and book manufacturing firm, Foote & Davies Inc., a division of McCall Corp. Before going with the Atlanta firm, Hotchkiss was in the commercial department of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. in Richmond.

In Atlanta Hotchkiss has served as Key Club Chairman for the Kiwanis Club, district chief of Beta Theta Pi social fraternity for the states of Georgia and Florida, and as president and secretary of the Washington and Lee Alumni Association.

The Campus Is Busy In Summer Now

High School Teachers of French And Geology Increase Knowledge And Teaching Skills Under New Summer Programs at the University Directed by Dr. Drake & Dr. McGuire

A LONG A BUSY VIRGINIA HIGHWAY, a group of people are chipping away at roadside rock with small pickaxes.

Ignoring the traffic rushing behind them, each person pounds at the rock walls, and then one picks up a fragment and calls the others over. "Ooos" and "aahs" are heard as the rock is examined.

A passing motorist screeches his car to a halt and inquires:

"What are you looking for?"

"Rocks," is the answer.

Unbelieving, the motorist drives a few feet farther and asks another rock-chipper the same question.

"Fossils," is the reply this time.

The motorist scratches his head and drives on.

Forty miles away, a group of students sits in a college classroom, methodically reciting the French alphabet.

"Aah, bay say . . ."

Typical scenes at a university? Yes and no.

They are not typical at Washington and Lee University for several reasons. First, the rock-hunters are a mixed group of men and women. Two are Catholic nuns.

The youngsters studying French are not college students but grade schoolers. And seated behind them in the classroom, observing their every lip movement and sound, is another mixed group of adults.

But the two scenes were typical this summer on the Washington and Lee campus and in the surrounding mountains. The University was host to two federally-sponsored summer institutes, one in French and the other in geology.

Both groups, made up of secondary school teachers from many states, lived in university dormitories, ate in the school's dining hall, and attended classes and laboratory sessions in Washington and Lee facilities which are usually vacant during the summer.

In the French institute, the participants not only became more proficient in the language, but learned something of the French people, their country, and their culture through lectures, slides, and reading.

The French participants also were observers while others learned. Each week day a group of approximately 25 Lexington school children in grades 7-12 who had never had any previous French instruction attended a "demonstration class."

During the hour-long session, the students were taught by James P. Ward, a Falls Church, Va., teacher and a member of the institute staff. He employed the latest teaching methods and techniques.

After the grade schoolers ended their session with Ward, it was the institute participants' turn. Consulting notes they had taken during the demonstration class, they discussed with Ward the methods he used. He explained why he used them and the participants "critiqued" them.

Participants in such institutes are almost bombarded with French. "They listen to French spoken in person and on records, they speak French (dinner conversation in the language is required at mealtime), they read French and they write French," noted Dr. G. Francis Drake, the Washington and Lee professor who was institute director.

While the emphasis in the French institute was on teaching the teachers the latest in techniques and methods, the objective in the geology institute was to increase the participants' knowledge of geology.

As one participant described it, "It's like taking a complete introductory geology course in six weeks."

Besides classroom instruction and lab work with Dr. Odell C. McGuire, institute director, and his staff, the geology participants took several field trips to study geological formations in the Virginia countryside.

Not only did they chip at roadside rocks, but they were able to combine field trips with visits to tourist attractions such as Natural Bridge, Luray Caverns and Appomattox.

Washington and Lee's summer institutes in French and Geology were designed to fulfill different purposes. The French institute's goal was to instruct high school teachers in the latest, most effective teaching techniques, as well as to increase their competency in the language. The demonstration class, shown in session above, permitted teachers to observe an expert instructor in action with a group of youngsters confronting French for the first time. The geology institute was primarily concerned with instructing high school teachers in basic geologic fundamentals. This involved frequent field trips, conducted by institute director DR. ODELL C. MCGUIRE, bottom right, and other members of his faculty.

Institute instructor JAMES P. WARD leads the demonstration class in a pronunciation practice that comes hard at first for some, but then, progressively easier, and the instructor indicates "By George, she's got it!"

"These phenomena are of interest geologically as well as being wonders of nature," Dr. McGuire noted.

Both institutes proved highly successful in achieving their goals, according to the men who direct them.

Dr. McGuire, assistant professor of geology at Washington and Lee, cites two "main reasons" for the success:

"First, we had a good group, thirty-one persons. We had enough applications so that we could be more selective and get the type person who really wanted to get something out of the institute.

"Secondly, this area of Virginia is ideal for the type of geological instruction we wanted to give. There is such a variety of geological formations in the Blue Ridge, the other surrounding mountains and in the valleys."

Dr. Drake's staff included members of the Washington and Lee Department of French, a number of visiting instructors and five French natives who conducted conversation courses.

"The outstanding feature of this institute," says Dr. Drake, "was the excellent group of participants and the excellent staff which cooperated so well with each other.

The forty-nine French teachers who were students this summer believe the institute, and especially the demonstration classes, was most beneficial. Said one:

"Most of us teach a beginner's class such as this demonstration class, and here we can see how the youngsters react to different techniques, and thus we can possibly avoid pitfalls when we are teaching."

Dr. Drake feels the class benefited the grade schoolers as well, even though they received no formal credit.

"The kids get a big kick out of the class," he said. "They must be because we had very few dropouts, and attendance is entirely voluntary. Though they get no credit, this instruction will stand them in good stead when they take regular French courses in school."

Federal grants under the National Defense Education Act and National Science Foundation programs financed all expenses of the institutes, including staff salaries and a stipend of $75 a week for the participants.

Those who completed the course successfully are eligible to receive credit toward graduate work; eight semester hours in French, six in geology.

The institutes aren't all work and no play. A varied extra-curricular program included picnics, folk-singing and dancing, skits and weekend excursions. On July 14 the French institute members celebrated the French "Bastille Day"—similar to the United States' Independence Day—with a dinner party and skit.

At least one romance has bloomed from the institute. Instructor Mme. Andree Courrieu and her "pupil," James Underwood of Doylestown, Ohio, met during a similar French institute at Washington and Lee last summer.

The couple continued to date and became engaged last Christmas. Mme. Courrieu returned to Washington and Lee this summer, again as an instructor. Although not eligible to attend the institute a second time, Underwood moved to Lexington to be near his fiancee, and one weekend they were married in his hometown, returning to Lexington in time for classes Monday.

When the institute closed on August 12, they set out on their real honeymoon trip.

To France, of course.

Newlyweds Andree and James Underwood, who found that a French Institute can lead to more than just greater fluency in the French language.

Artmobile IV, the Virginia Museum's "collegiate artmobile," is displayed in Richmond prior to embarking on its first tour of Virginia campuses in the fall of 1966. Display panels on the outer walls are revealed when built-in hydraulic lifts raise the sidewall-awnings. The interior is outfitted with rubber tile floor, accoustical tile ceiling, monk's cloth walls, air conditioning, humidity controls, and elaborate fire and burglar alarm systems.

Virginia's Collegiate Artmobile Ready For Visits to Sixteen Institutions

By GEORGE A. CRUGER, '62
Public Information Coordinator
The Virginia Museum of Fine Arts

Author GEORGE CRUGER, '62, left, discusses Artmobile IV's campus visits with FRED HASELTINE, head of the Museum's public information department.

THE VIRGINIA MUSEUM in Richmond was formed more than three decades ago "to promote . . . education in the realm of art." Washington and Lee University undertook to do the same when it established its Fine Arts Department in 1949. This fall, the two institutions will join forces to provide a new and dynamic way to realize their goal.

Artmobile IV, the "Collegiate Artmobile," will visit Lexington November 5 for exclusive showings on the Washington and Lee and VMI campuses. The traveling art gallery will be in the midst of its inaugural tour, and securely displayed inside will be "Treasures of the Ancient World," a comprehensive exhibition prepared by the Museum staff exclusively for sixteen Virginia colleges and universities.

The story of the Collegiate Artmobile began in 1953, the year the Museum commissioned its first mobile museum. Financed solely by private funds, the world's first Artmobile took to the road and began a tour of Virginia that has not yet slowed down.

Since then, mobile art ventures have been established in a few other states, but the Virginia Museum still is regarded as the pioneer in this field. Inquiries about design, construction, and operation have come from overseas and from nearly every state in the nation. In the past few months, largely because of increases in federal monies made available to art-conscious governments and institutions, the influx of visitors to the Museum has accelerated to a sometimes dizzying pace.

Since 1953, Artmobiles of the Virginia Museum have been bringing some of the Museum's most valuable possessions to the very doorsteps of Virginia residents. Artmobile IV was designed especially for periodic visits to the campuses of Virginia's sixteen colleges and universities.

The Museum's Artmobile II was donated in 1962 and by last year private donors had given some $160,000 for two more vehicles, one of them the Lexington-bound Artmobile IV. The Carnegie Corporation of New York and E. Claiborne Robins of Richmond of the pharmaceutical firm of A. H. Robins Company, Inc., each donated half of the $65,000 cost of the Collegiate Artmobile trailer. An anonymous Museum friend gave $15,000 for both new tractors.

The natural question arises: Why attach a "for college only" label to this new Museum acquisition?

Museum staff members, in particular the Director, Leslie Cheek, Jr., had convincing reasons. Since World War II, sixteen colleges in Virginia had added full-fledged art departments to their curricula. These departments had advanced in most areas, but they all shared a common problem: the absence of original art objects for the benefit of student, faculty, and community.

An investigation revealed that only one of the colleges had an art collection of any significance, and that that one was limited to American paintings of the late 19th and 20th centuries.

"None of the institutions provided original objects to illustrate the world-wide field of man's artistic creativeness from primitive to the present," Mr. Cheek noted in a report to college presidents in November, 1964. "And the chance that these colleges would ever acquire such collections seemed to grow dimmer in proportion to the ever more costly art market."

Mr. Cheek reasoned that the Virginia Museum, supported by the state, recipient of regular income from private endowments, and participant in loan agreements with many of America's older and larger museums, indeed is in a position to make works of art available.

Naturally, the Museum's existing Artmobile system provided the perfect means for accomplishing the task. Not only was the entire system already solidly established, but it also had gained a reputation throughout art-lending circles for unparalleled safety of art objects.

Specifically, the Artmobiles include a sophisticated theft prevention system; anti-fire measures; and even air conditioning and humidity control, designed as much for the safety of the delicate pieces on display as for the comfort of visitors. No small part of this reputation is due to the extreme care the staff takes in securing the works for their cross-country Virginia jaunts.

As a result, Virginia Museum Artmobiles have carried art treasures from the famous Karolik collection of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts; the Detroit Institute of Arts; the internationally-famous collection of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Mellon; New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art; the Walter Chrysler collection; and the John Wise collection. This fall Artmobile II is carrying Northwest American Coast Indian artifacts from the Portland (Oregon) Museum and the American Museum of Natural History. "Treasures from the Guggenheim," including works by Kandinsky, Klee, Picasso, and Chagall, is visiting Museum chapter and affiliate communities aboard Artmobile III.

Thus, the problem was recognized and the solution was available. All that remained was a concrete proposal.

Last spring, Washington and Lee's President Cole joined presidents of other represented colleges and universities to actually enroll their institutions in the program. At that meeting, Andrew Ritchie, director of the Yale University Art Gallery, reported on his survey into college art instruction, and August Hecksher, director of the Twentieth Century Fund and special consultant on arts under President Kennedy, discussed the importance of education in arts.

Ten days later, college art department heads, including Dr.

Marion Junkin of Washington and Lee, assembled in Richmond to solidify details. Among other things, the Artmobile's circuit was mapped and subjects for the first two exhibitions were chosen.

How will the program be implemented on the sixteen Virginia campuses?

Financially, a $31,500 grant from the Carnegie Corporation will be used to establish an initial orientation program in cooperation with the University Center in Virginia, Inc. Each semester the colleges will receive a week-long Artmobile visit, always featuring a different exhibition, to have been selected the previous spring at a meeting of art department chairmen and key Museum staff members. In addition, two seminars will be held at the Museum during the 1967-68 fall and spring semesters to familiarize the college representatives with the use of original art objects on campus. The seminars will be led by leading art personalities.

An Artmobile advisor, Dr. Mary

F. Williams, chairman of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College art department, will visit the campuses in the fall of 1967 to confer with the faculty and administration on the most effective use of the Artmobile at each location. The Museum's full-time Artmobile coordinator, Charles L. Wyrick, will oversee the day-to-day operation and visit the colleges occasionally during the year. Mr. Wyrick, a former professor of English at Stephens College in Missouri and a holder of a Master of Fine Arts degree, will adapt his special talents to both the educational and exhibition phases of the program.

When the Artmobile arrives on campus, it will be under the sole supervision and control of Dr. Junkin and his committee.

Washington and Lee students of the many subjects that relate directly or indirectly to art of the world will then file through to marvel, criticize, contemplate. And hopefully they will benefit from their experience.

Ten Months at Sea For Two W&L Men

Warren Montgomery, '67, Describes Life Aboard an Oceanographic Research Ship for Him and Another Student who Interrupted Their Academic Careers To Join an Important Scientific Team

AS THE SHIP rolled sickeningly to starboard and then lurched forward through heavy seas off the coast of New Jersey, I thought, "What have I gotten into? I should be back at W&L right now." For the tenth time that night I staggered out onto the deck and over to the rail, to keep from being sick in the afterlab. Two months later, watching sunrise over the cloud-shrouded peaks of Tahiti, I was again incredulous at being aboard an oceanographic research ship rather than at the usual academic labors of Washington and Lee's junior year.

The oceanographic adventure started in the late fall of 1965, when I and other students taking courses in geology at Washington and Lee heard visiting oceanographer Richard Pratt speak on modern exploration of the sea and the earth beneath it. The idea of sea-going research was intriguing, and after one of his lectures, I asked Dr. Pratt if students were ever taken aboard research ships. He encouraged me to write to several oceanographic research organizations. With the attitude that there was nothing to lose in doing so, I wrote three and then quickly forgot about the fanciful notion of going to sea instead of going to college.

But when I arrived back in Lexington after Christmas vacation, there was a letter from Lamont Geological Observatory of Columbia University informing me that I had a very good chance of joining in the Author WARREN MONTGOMERY proudly exhibits the nepholometer, an underwater camera and light unit, which he made himself in the Vema's machine shop, after the ship's regular unit was lost on the ocean bottom. MONTGOMERY is currently a senior majoring in geology, with plans for graduate study in his field. His home is in Memphis, Tenn.

The author took this photograph of the Vema from a small boat during an anchorage in the South Pacific. The Vema was built in the 1920's and was once used by heiress Barbara Hutton as a pleasure schooner. During World War II and immediately afterward, it was employed by the Navy as a cargo vessel. The Lamont Observatory purchased the ship and completely remodeled it to conform to its special research requirements.

forthcoming cruise of the research vessel Vema into the Pacific ocean. It turned out that Lamont would take two students, and after interviews in New York, my fellow geology major Chip Roadman and I were signed up as scientific personnel of the Vema's crew. Washington and Lee obliged us with leaves-of-absence for one year.

So, on February 11, 1965, Chip and I were aboard the 200-foot long, ex-schooner Vema as she put out of New York and into the Atlantic, en route to the Panama Canal and the Pacific. The cruise was to last just ten months and cover over 46,000 nautical miles before the ship returned to New York the following December.

After a few days of sea sickness, we settled down to the routine of research. The ship's complement consisted of a Nova Scotian sailing crew of nineteen, including captain and officers, and twelve scientists, mostly American but including German, Chinese, and Japanese members. Each of us had a specific research job to perform under the supervision of a chief scientist, and we each had to stand eight hours of watch a day as well. "Watch" entailed monitoring the complex oceanographic electronic equipment and periodically marking the time on data records.

The ship performed a number of research operations at once. While under way, customarily at around 10 knots under diesel power, instruments towed behind the ship and mounted on the hull collected data, which were electronically processed and printed as graphs in the electronics lab, or afterlab. In this manner, we made continuous measurements of the earth's magnetic and gravity fields, water temperature, depth to the bottom, and the configuration of the layered sediments beneath the bottom.

At least once a day the ship would heave-to to make stationary measurements. At these daily stations, 20 to 60-foot cores of the bottom sediments would be brought up, microscopic plant and animal life (plankton) would be sampled with nets, photographs would be made of the bottom, water samples would be taken, and the bottom temperature would be measured for evidence of heat flowing up from the earth's interior.

Chip's job was to analyze the bottom cores; my assignment was to operate the bottom cameras and develop the films. Over most of the ocean, the water is two to three miles deep, and all station instruments were lowered from the deck. No one ever went over the side into the water to take measurements. (In fact, the captain had an iron-clad rule against swimming in the sea while on station—there was too much danger from sharks.)

The Vema remained at sea up to a month between ports, rarely sighting land or other shipping during these times. For such long periods at sea, the Vema carried great quantities of fuel and stores. Fresh water was plentiful enough to shower and wash clothes, thanks to condensers which converted salt sea water to fresh. The research equipment was maintained by large stores of electronic components and replacement parts for other gear. A machine shop occupied almost a fourth of the space below deck.

For the scientists, the day-to-day routine of research was rigorous. For a man on the 8 to 12 watch, a typical day might go as follows: Out of the bunk at 0730 and on watch at 0800. Monitor instruments and mark data records from 0800 to 1200. Dinner at 1200 followed by work on individual research project—analyzing cores, developing film, maintaining electronics equipment, etc. Ship heaves-to for station at 1400 (2:00 p.m.); assist with station instruments—core, cameras, nets, or water barrels. Ship under way again at 1700 (5:00 p.m.); help put out towed gear and then go to supper. Go on watch again at 2000 (8:00 p.m.) until 0000 (midnight), then turn in.

CHIP ROADMAN, Washington and Lee senior who accompanied the author on the oceanographic voyage, is shown lighting fuses for depth charges in the Vema's seismic refraction research program.

This photograph of the author on watch suggests the climatic extremes encountered by the Vema and its crew during the 46,000-mile voyage. This shot was made while near the Aleutian Island of Adak.

Such a schedule left little time for leisure, and when intensive station work (two or three stops a day) occurred, we missed sleep as well. The work week lasted all seven days; we were much too busy ever to be bored.

No matter how exotic its itinerary, a research vessel does not resemble a cruise ship, although the Vema once was one. All available space is occupied by instruments and equipment; and living quarters are small and crowded. On the Vema, the scientists were bunked in four two-man cabins and a four-man cabin, in the aft part of the ship. The cabin that Chip and I shared measured six feet by eight. The cabins of the officers and chief scientist were not much larger, and the crew occupied bunks in the forecabin. Except for the cabins and the small dining room, there was no place to relax, the rest of the ship being working space.

But the discomforts of hard work, long hours, and cramped quarters were more than offset for Chip and me by the stimulating experience of participating in important scientific research while working with some of the world's most outstanding oceanographic scientists. Equally rewarding was the experience of calling at ports that most Americans seldom see. Though fast being exposed to the so-called benefits of western civilization by its French owners, Tahiti is still a tropical paradise of grandiose scenery and friendly people.

Hawaii matches the volcano, reef, and beach vistas of Polynesia with a vigorous, transplanted culture of American, Chinese, Japanese, Filipino, and native peoples.

Tokyo was perhaps the most interesting place we visited. Here, western architecture, dress, and commerce blend and sometimes conflict with traditional Japanese values and customs. While we were always treated with the famous Japanese politeness and consideration, we were also aware of the almost daily anti-American demonstrations (one of which Chip and I witnessed) against the war in Vietnam.

In Manila, we saw both the friendship which the Filipinos still have for America and the poverty and corruption which plague this archipelago republic. Panama seemed an even worse case of an impoverished economy and dissatisfied people. Here, Americans are not so highly regarded, mutely underscored by the gutted shell of the Pan-Am Building, burned in Panama City during the anti-American riots over the Canal.

Our less interesting ports at least provided much-needed rests from our research work. Okinawa was an Oriental rurality, Bermuda was quaintly British-colonial, and Adak in the Aleutians was cold and rainy—but restful.

When we finally steamed back through Verrazano Narrows and into New York Harbor last December, we were almost as excited to be home as we had been at the prospect of sailing ten months before. However, when Chip and I returned to Washington and Lee to take up where we had left off, we realized that we had had an experience in travel and training for our future professions that is of inestimable value to us. We have enjoyed a unique interlude to our studies at Washington and Lee.

Five at W&L Granted Leaves for Study

■ FIVE MEMBERS of the faculty and administration at Washington and Lee University are taking leaves of absence for the 1966-67 school year to pursue graduate studies and research.

They are J. Rex Baird, instructor in biology; Norris Eastman, assistant professor of physical education; Dr. H. Robert Huntley, assistant professor of English; John K. Jennings, '56, assistant professor of journalism, and Lewis G. John, '58, assistant dean of students and director of student financial aid.

Baird will be at the University of North Carolina completing research toward his doctoral thesis. He also will be instructing in the department of botany there.

Eastman will attend Florida State University for work in exercise physiology in swimming—a study of the amount of energy required for various forms of survival swimming. He will be working toward his Ph.D. and also hopes to interest the Navy Research and federal Vocational Rehabilitation departments in the study.

Dr. Huntley will study at North Carolina and Duke under the Cooperative Program in the Humanities sponsored by those universities.

He will conduct research in his special field of interest—the English Edwardian novel and writer Ford Madox Ford.

Jennings will attend Stanford University for study in communications research and international communications, leading toward his master's degree.

Jennings has been awarded a Lehman Graduate Fellowship from the State of New York to complete work toward his doctorate. He will attend Syracuse University's Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs in its Doctor of Social Science program.

Lewis Brothers Win High Academic Honors

■ A MARTINSVILLE YOUTH, Charles C. Lewis, was awarded the Phi Beta Kappa Sophomore Award for 1966 at Washington and Lee University.

The award is given each year by the local chapter to the Washington and Lee sophomore with the highest scholastic average for the first three semesters of his college career. It includes a $25 cash prize to be used by Lewis to purchase books for his personal library.

Other academic achievements for Lewis at Washington and Lee include the university honor roll, dean's list and membership in Phi Eta Sigma, honorary scholastic fraternity for freshmen.

Lewis, the son of Dr. and Mrs. C. Irving Lewis, '31, is a graduate of Martinsville High School, where he was at the top of his class.

Lewis' older brother, John, was valedictorian of the class of 1966, an honor traditionally bestowed on the senior with the highest grade point average.

Promotions for Thirteen Professors

■ Promotions for 13 members of the faculty at Washington and Lee University became effective on September 1.

Promoted from associate professor to professor are Dr. Charles F. Phillips, Jr., economics, and James W. H. Stewart, '52, law.

Assistant professors promoted to associate professors include Dr. Jefferson Davis Futch, III, history; Dr. J. Brown Goehring, chemistry; Dr.

H. Marshall Jarrett, '52, history; Dr. Emory Kimbrough, Jr., sociology, and Dr. Odell S. McGuire, geology.

Promoted from instructor to assistant professor were W. Dabney Stuart, III, English; Robert S. Johnson, mathematics; John M. Evans, English; George W. Ray, English, and John F. DeVogt, commerce.

Robert H. Gray, lecturer in law, becomes a professor of law.

1965-66 Alumni Fund Contributors

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE 1965-1966 Alumni Fund totaled $179,222.60, a new record level of support for the University through the annual giving of alumni.

The total was $3,649.83 higher than the amount realized through the Alumni Fund of the previous year, although the number of contributors supporting the 1965-1966 effort was 272 below that of the previous campaign.

The Alumni Fund Council, under the chairmanship of George M. Persinger, '51, was responsible for the conduct of the campaign. Although the final tabulation fell short of the announced goal of $225,000, the Council termed the effort "most successful."

Much credit for the success of the Alumni Fund is due to the many alumni who served as Class Agents and who otherwise contributed time and energy, as well as their gifts, to the fund drive.

Of the 11,194 alumni solicited for the fund, the 3,694 contributors represent a response percentage of 32.99. The average gift was $48.51, more than four dollars higher than in 1964-65.

Honorary Degrees Are Conferred Upon Three Outstanding Alumni

AN ATTORNEY, a university president, and a professor—all Washington and Lee alumni—were presented honorary degrees during Washington and Lee's commencement ending its 217th academic year.

Doctor of Laws degrees were bestowed upon H. Graham Morison, '32L, an attorney in Washington D. C.; Dr. Harry M. Philpott, '38, president of Auburn University; and Dr. Charles M. Williams, '37, professor of commercial banking at the Harvard Graduate School of Business.

President Cole conferred the degrees before an audience of approximately 1,750 persons, including the University's 275 1966 graduates.

Morison was cited by Dr. Cole for "distinguished leadership, significant service and unswerving devotion" to Washington and Lee, and because his legal career "has won admiration and respect among all those associated with him."

Morison is a former assistant attorney general of the United States. A native of Johnson City, Tenn., he received his B.S. degree in 1930 and his Bachelor of Laws two years later, both at Washington and Lee. He practiced law in Bristol, Tenn., in New York, N. Y., and in Washington, and served the government with both the War Production Board and the Department of Justice. He served in the Marine Corps during World War II.

Dr. Philpott was cited as a man of maturity and wisdom whose "vigor and experience are sure to benefit" Auburn and to honor Washington and Lee.

"As a minister of religion, an able administrator, a world traveler, and a sympathetic friend to students, he was an ideal choice, in 1965, for the presidency of Auburn University," Dr. Cole said.

A native of Bassett and a 1938 cum laude graduate of Washington and Lee, Dr. Philpott served in World War II as a Navy chaplain, received his Ph.D. at Yale, served as professor of religion and philosophy and as dean at Stephens College, then as vice president of the University of Florida before assuming the Auburn presidency.

Dr. Williams was cited "as a teacher, a consultant, an author, and a director of important financial institutions, and whose expert knowledge and wise counsel have won respect, admiration, and acclaim."

Dr. Williams is a native of Romney, W. Va., and received his A.B. degree with Phi Beta Kappa honors at Washington and Lee in 1937. After receiving advanced degrees from Harvard, working with a New York banking firm and serving in the Navy during World War II, he joined the Harvard faculty in 1947. He was named by Harvard to the newly-created George Gund Professorship of Commercial Banking in May of this year.

A Big Day For Cy Young

Graduation Day 1966, was a big day for "Cy" Young, Washington and Lee's former alumni secretary and its most outstanding athlete. Cy was on hand for the graduation of his grandson, Melvin Neely Young, II, and for an informal reunion with old friends.

In the photograph above, Cy gets a big laugh from Bob Spessard, '39, who led Washington and Lee to Southern Conference basketball championships under Cy's coaching. Spessard's son, Robert, Jr., also was a 1966 graduate.

ROTC Classes Learn Helicopter Warfare from "Soc Trang Tiger"

FIRST LT. ROBERT L. WHEELOCK, III, '63, returned to the campus from Vietnam early in October, and found himself a guest lecturer before students in the University's ROTC classes.

One of the first of Washington and Lee's Vietnam veterans to visit the University since the big American build-up began over a year ago, Wheelock described the mission and tactics of helicopter use in Southeast Asia.

Behind him were over 650 hours as a combat helicopter pilot with the famous 121st Assault Helicopter Company, the "Soc Trang Tigers" who are the second-oldest helicopter unit fighting in Vietnam.

Wheelock, who prepared for his Army commission while a Washington and Lee ROTC cadet, visited friends at the University and consulted with faculty members in the School of Commerce and Administration on his plans for graduate school when he completes his active duty commitment. Next duty station for Wheelock is Fort Wolters, Texas, where he expects to be an instructor at the Army's primary helicopter training center.

Soft-spoken and modest in regard to his personal accomplishments in military service, Wheelock provided ROTC cadets with a valuable insight on the Vietnam war. He surprised some when he described the American mission in Vietnam as "not primarily to kill the Viet Cong, but to rehabilitate them as useful citizens of South Vietnam."

Before coming to Lexington, Wheelock was interviewed by a reporter for his hometown newspaper, the Corsicana, Texas, Daily Sun. The major portion of this interview is reprinted below:

Just what does a helicopter pilot do in war torn Vietnam?

"You call it, we haul it," Wheelock replied with an ever widening grin as he relaxed from the tension built up from months of war and the excitement of getting home safe and sound to loved ones.

Lt. Wheelock landed in Vietnam Sept. 15, 1965, and was stationed at Soc Trang military base about 110 miles southwest of Saigon. His outfit the 121st Assault Helicopter Company was known as the "Soc Trang Tigers" and it's the second oldest American chopper unit in Vietnam, going there in September, 1962.

His craft, the UH-1 (Huey) made by Bell Helicopter at Hurst, is the standard troop carrier type. The Soc Trang Tigers fly in assault troops, re-supply missions, and after major battles go back to airlift the dead, and perform rescue opera-

LT. WHEELOCK uses a map of Southeast Asia to describe air assault operations in which he participated as a helicopter pilot in South Vietnam.

Wheelock was the intelligence officer and assistant operations officer for his company.

Out of modesty, he was reticent about his personal war experiences preferring to speak of his unit, and their group activities and accomplishments and the honors accorded the units.

Drawn out, he recounted one incident in which his ship flew protective cover while another chopper rescued two aviators from the Carrier Enterprise whose plane was shot down in the Gulf of Siam, and another time when he ran across another Corsicana helicopter pilot 1st Lt. Budd Beasley stationed at Bien Hoa, northeast of Saigon. Beasley's unit is nicknamed the "Cowboys."

On this particular occasion Wheelock's company had run some trawlers from North Vietnam aground where they were bringing in supplies to a hard core VC (Viet Cong) area.

As he put it, "We ran into a little trouble, we had all our aircraft engaged and we were undermanned for the size of the operation and called on the Cowboys," he related, explaining that it was a normal thing for one company to support or go in and help out another unit when the occasion required.

Wheelock's unit was a member of the initial helicopter assault in the so-called "Iron Triangle" last year shortly before Christmas. The Iron Triangle is an area, he explained, near Ben Cat which for years had been a VC sanctuary. Helicopters, including Wheelock's, carried in Australian and U.S. combat troops "to clean it up and set it up so the 1st Infantry could come in and set up operations, later supported by air strikes by B52 bombers." This was a major engagement and one that was publicized in Life magazine, he recalled.

Wheelock received combat wounds, but it was from a ground attack by the VC on his Soc Trang base, and not while he was flying. It was on June 22 when the VC shelled the air field with 75 mm recoilless rifles. He was hit by flying debris from the shelling.

"It was one of many attacks, but I was only under about ten such incidents," he recalled. Lt. Wheelock said the U.S. military forces usually knew when to expect such attacks, but not always. Security guards for their bases were supplied by Vietnamese soldiers.

The area of Vietnam where Wheelock saw most of his year's duty was in the Delta country, primarily rice fields, in the open low lands; the jungles being mostly to the north. Because of this region, his 13th Combat Aviation Battalion, comprised of four companies, was called the Delta Battalion.

"I got shot at plenty of times but never hit (in the air)," he answered, reaching to a table between his and the reporter's chair to gently "knock wood."

Wheelock's unit, which had a combat strength of 25 choppers, lost only two pilots.

"I had a guy shot down right in front of me once. He had an outstanding record. We had plenty of pilots shot down but we went in and rescued them," he related. Of the two who were killed, he explained they were hit by heavy anti-aircraft fire and there was nothing to be done for them when their ships exploded.

The young pilot explained that whatever type of helicopter aircraft is needed for a particular mission is sent, but a medic helicopter flies above as cover. Some craft such as his are primarily for ferrying in assault troops, they have armaments for protective purposes, but not as much firepower as ships whose purpose is to seek out and shoot at the enemy. The medic choppers are equipped with hoists for lifting wounded from remote junglelike areas where they can't set down.

Wheelock's aircraft would descend to the ground, knowing usually that it was safe, the landing area having already been secured. Of course, there were times when fellow pilots were downed and they landed, or hovered to effect the rescue, and there was no such thing as security.

The Corsicanan's unit got the Distinguished Unit Citation, which is the highest unit award the nation gives, and his company was the only company size unit to receive the Vietnamese Fourragere, decoration to a unit of troops for conspicuous gallantry. Only three American units ever received the Fourragere in Vietnam and they were much larger size units than his company.

His decorations, in addition to these high honors, include the Air Medal with 15 Oak Leaf clusters, the Army Commendation Medal for Valor, Purple Heart, National Defense Service Medal of the United States, National Defense Service Medal of Vietnam, the Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry (division level), and he was put in by superior officers as a candidate to receive the Bronze Star for meritorious service.

Wheelock received his Army commission upon graduation from Washington and Lee in June, 1963, and entered active duty in June, 1963. He received his helicopter training at Fort Rucker, Ala., and Fort Wolters.

Washington and Lee University
Alumni Magazine

A STATEMENT

The following is a statement of ownership, management, and circulation of THE ALUMNI MAGAZINE of Washington and Lee University as required by act of Congress of August 24, 1912, as amended by the Acts of March 3, 1933, July 2, 1946, and June 11, 1960. THE ALUMNI MAGAZINE is published quarterly and entered as second class matter at the post office at Lexington, Virginia, September 15, 1924.

The printer is the Washington and Lee Journalism Laboratory Press with C. Harold Lauck as superintendent. William C. Washburn is the editor and business manager. The address of the preceding is: Washington and Lee Alumni, Incorporated, Lexington, Virginia.

Robert White Becomes New President Of SDX Journalism Fraternity

ROBERT MITCHELL WHITE, II, '38, will be elected the 50th president of Sigma Delta Chi on November 11, almost thirty years to the day after being initiated into the national professional journalistic society during his undergraduate years at Washington and Lee University.

White, 51, noted editor and publisher of the Mexico (Mo.) Evening Ledger whose distinguished background also includes the editorship and presidency of the New York Herald Tribune from August, 1959, to March, 1961, was elected Sigma Delta Chi's vice president and president-elect at the 56th annual convention in Los Angeles, Calif., in November, 1965.

By MAURICE R. FLIESS, '66

The author was 1965-66 president of the Washington and Lee University chapter of Sigma Delta Chi and chapter delegate to the Los Angeles convention of SDX. He is currently graduate assistant in journalism at West Virginia University, whose SDX chapter is co-host at the 1966 convention in Pittsburgh.

During the 57th convention at Pittsburgh, Pa., this November, White will assume the presidency of the world's largest society of professional journalists, climaxing a step-by-step progression along the trail of the organization's highest offices. White was elected 1963-64 national treasurer three years ago, followed by his election as national secretary in 1964—in which capacity he served the Los Angeles convention.

A tall, handsome man, White will become the second alumnus of Washington and Lee University to preside over a national professional organization in three years. Lewis F. Powell, Jr., '29, of Richmond, Va., was president of the American Bar Association in 1964.

Like CBS News correspondent Roger Mudd, White achieved national prominence in journalism after majoring in history at Washington and Lee. But the Mexico, Mo., native did take numerous courses in the department of journalism and wrote for the Ring-tum Phi. For his achievements in journalism on campus he was initiated into Sigma Delta Chi in 1936.

"The chapter sessions in those days were mostly time well spent sitting at the feet of one Tom Riegel (Professor O. W. Riegel, veteran chairman of the department of journalism and communications) and listening to shop talk," White says, adding, "And even today, there is no one I would rather swap stories with than Tom."

In 1938, White graduated from Washington and Lee, where he had played varsity football and made his mark in that sport, to complement his accomplishments in journalism and in history. He was also a member of Beta Theta Pi, and in 1961 the fraternity selected him as "Beta of the Year."

A former carrier boy for the Mexico Ledger, White returned after graduation to that evening daily newspaper—a publication purchased and once published by his grandfather and at that time published by his father, L. Mitchell White. In 1939, White joined the Kansas City bureau of United Press until called into service in November, 1940, as a second lieutenant in Battery B, 128th Field Artillery.

After World War II, during which White compiled an impressive record (promotion to rank of major, the Bronze Star for "meritorious service in the Southwest Pacific area, 1942-1944," and a Presidential Unit Citation), White returned to Mexico, Mo., to become co-editor and publisher of the Mexico Ledger.

Sigma Delta Chi held its national convention in Missouri, at St. Louis, in 1953. "I was involved in some minor capacity," White recalls, "little knowing the convention was to be a turning point in my life." The turning point was White's meeting Bernard Kilgore, president of The Wall Street Journal and a man White considers "truly one of the publishing geniuses of our age."

"Meeting him was the beginning of a long and treasured friendship," White recalls. Among other things this friendship has led to continued active interest in Sigma Delta Chi, becoming president and editor of the New York Herald Tribune, and establishing that there is at least one man on this earth I can regularly beat in golf, although Mr. Kilgore might dispute this fact."

At the San Diego convention of Sigma Delta Chi in 1958, White and Kilgore discussed what steps could be taken to preserve the Herald Tribune. In April, 1959, while attending the American Newspaper Publishers Association meeting in New York, White received an invitation—relayed by Kilgore—from the Whitney family "asking me to talk to them about the Herald Tribune" they owned.

An agreement was reached; White became the editor and president that August, ushering in a new and revitalized era for the historic journal which traced its roots to Horace Greeley. Under White's leadership, the Herald Tribune won some of the most coveted journalistic awards, including one Pulitzer Prize. It jumped from 10th to sixth in the Bernay survey of the nation's Top Ten Newspapers—the largest gain in the history of the survey.

On November 18, 1960, John Hay Whitney, owner of the Herald Tribune announced in London where he was ambassador to the Court of St. James' that White had resigned and his resignation had been regretfully accepted. "In the past year and a half," Whitney said, "Bob White has made an enormous contribution to the paper. He has successfully directed its rebuilding during my absence and has laid the groundwork for continued development and growth.

When the New York Herald Tribune tragically folded during the newspaper strike of 1966, few were sadder than Robert M. White, II.

Before moving to the Herald Tribune and while serving as special consultant to the editor and publisher of the Chicago Sun-Times, White had been named a member of the National Council of Sigma Delta Chi. In 1958, he was elected SDX's national treasurer, but the forthcoming stint in New York delayed White's ascension to the top of the journalistic society.

Upon his return to Mexico, Mo., White says he "soon found myself once again busy with SDX. And this in turn led to the chairs through which I am now going." He also resumed the winning of many honored awards for the Mexico Ledger, one of the nation's most-decorated newspapers. Among its awards is the Sigma Delta Chi National Distinguished Award for editorials in 1952.

White will take office at a convention that promises to be a tumultuous one, with an agenda that includes a proposal to admit female journalists into the organization, and a proposal to consider changing the name of Sigma Delta Chi, founded in 1909 and now containing about 170 campus and professional chapters.

He says he has firm goals for Sigma Delta Chi which he will present "at a later time and in the context of a more fully rounded program." One of his goals, he admits, is to work in a visit to Washington and Lee during a busy presidential year "and again sit at the feet of Tom Riegel."

White is married to the former Barbara Spurgeon, of Muncie, Ind., and they have three daughters, Barbara, 17, Jane, 16, and Laura, 11, and one son, Robert M. White, III, 3.

Washington Chapter Has Large Attendance

■ THE ARMY-NAVY Downtown Club was the site again this year for the Chapter's annual reception and welcome to the new freshmen and their parents. A luncheon was held on Wednesday, August 31, and was attended by one of the largest gatherings of this type in the chapter's history.

Presiding over the luncheon was president of the chapter, Vernon Holleman, '58, and secretary treasurer, Arthur C. Smith, Jr., '41.

Following the introduction of the new freshmen and their parents, the alumni expressed their welcome with a long round of applause. Of special interest was a short talk made by Jeremy Earle (Jeb) Brown, a present undergraduate student and son of alumnus, Earle P. Brown, '44. In his remarks Jeb covered many important features of the freshman year on the Washington and Lee campus.

At the conclusion of the luncheon, Bill Washburn, Executive Secretary, presented a few colored slides of campus scenes, Freshman Camp scenes, and recent activities at Washington and Lee.

New York Honors Freshmen, Holds Annual Picnic

■ MEL HICKS, JR., '52, president of the New York Chapter, presided at the chapter's annual reception for the new incoming freshmen from the metropolitan area. The affair was held at the New York Athletic Club in New York City on Tuesday, August 30. A large number of Alumni were on hand to welcome the freshmen and the parents.

Highlighting the events of the evening was a panel discussion conducted by alumni, Steve Galef, '62, Randy Wootton, '64, Ed Crosland, '66, and undergraduate Bill Timmerman, '68. Steve Galef was the monitor for this program which explained for the freshmen four very important areas of campus life. Following the panel discussion, questions from the freshmen and their parents were answered by the panelists.

Bill Washburn, Executive Secretary, was on hand for the meeting and at the conclusion thereof presented some colored slides of the campus and especially of Freshman Camp.

■ THE TRADITIONAL summer picnic for the New York Chapter was again held at Emmett Poindexter's "Sunlit Farm" out in Putnam Valley, New York, on Saturday, June 25. Alumni and their guests gathered for another informal party, including swimming, baseball, and horseshoes.

The annual affair has become one of the highlights of the year's program. In the traditional show of warm hospitality, Mrs. Poindexter provided a special picnic "treat."
