Important Lee Papers Given the University

(The President's Page)

THANKS to four benefactions, three from alumni and one from a friend, the University has come into possession of four of the six groups of Lee letters which constituted the Alfred C. Meyer collection, sold in New York City on January 13.

The offering of this material attracted considerable attention in newspapers. Several alumni and at least one parent of a present student wrote me urging that we acquire the manuscripts. It was suggested to me, though I am not prepared to make a definite statement, that this may be the last large collection of Lee material that will come on the market.

Added to the numerous letters and various documents bearing General Lee's signature which are now in our possession, these letters give us a truly notable representation of General Lee's papers. I presume that from this time forward, though I can not draw comparisons because of the lack of knowledge, this University will be one of the major sources of information about General Lee.

The feeling on the campus is that we have taken a step of considerable significance. Washington and Lee may never become one of the great depositories of all forms of miscellaneous historical documents; but it should certainly hold as much as possible of source material about its own history, about the great personalities who have been connected with it, and about the social stratum from which the University sprang.

One of the foremost American historians was on our campus not long ago and expressed enthusiasm for a little chest of letters of William Fleming, a man of importance in the early settlement of Kentucky. This is but one example of other types of source material which we claim.

Fixed in our dreams is the conception of a new library building, where we hope to have a room in which our original documents will be kept safely, properly catalogued, and made available for the uses of scholarship. In the meantime these manuscripts are kept in spacious vaults where there can be no question of their safety. It is our earnest hope that this general collection will be increased as rapidly as possible. Many institutions are setting aside large sums for the acquisition of this kind of material. We can never spend a great deal of money for such a purpose, but we hope earnestly for the generosity of our friends in this respect.

May I repeat what I said in an earlier article, that if any alumnus has any kind of historical material which he wishes to place where it will be appreciated, and where it will be safeguarded, and where it will ultimately be made available to those who have a right to its use, he may well consider his own Alma Mater as the best depository. In this way he will guarantee the preservation of what he himself knows to be precious, and he will be enriching the value of Washington and Lee as a center of authentic information for its own students and for American scholarship in general.

The Late Newton D. Baker

WASHINGTON AND LEE lost one of its most distinguished alumni when Newton Diehl Baker, one of America's outstanding statesmen and member of the law class of 1894, died Christmas Day in Cleveland.

Famous for the remarkably efficient manner in which he raised an army of millions when Secretary of War under Woodrow Wilson, he was noted, however, as a peace lover and spent a great part of his life in the promotion of international welfare.

Mr. Baker came to Washington and Lee in 1892 after graduating from Johns Hopkins, and received his LL. B. degree in 1894. His soft-spoken, quiet manner won him little recognition as a leader on the Washington and Lee campus, but after graduating he demonstrated his leadership ability when responsibility came his way, and rose rapidly to a position of national prominence.

Mr. Baker, who was appointed trustee of Washington and Lee in 1928, retained his connection with the school until the very last, having written to Lexington six days before his death. Whether he was planning to attend the trustees' meeting January 19 was not known, but in all probability he was. He attended the meeting at Lexington last June.

"He was one of the most devoted trustees we had," Dr. Francis P. Gaines, president of the University, said recently. "He loved the school a great deal and always had its welfare at heart. He corresponded with it frequently."

Mr. Baker was a member of the Phi Gamma Delta social fraternity while at Washington and Lee, and proved his scholastic abilities by winning a Phi Beta Kappa key.

After graduating in 1894,

A Tribute to An Engineer's Career

THE ALUMNI MAGAZINE is privileged to print here an excerpt from the minutes of the annual meeting of the American Society of Civil Engineers in New York City, January 19, 1938, in which high tribute is paid the late Hunter McDonald of Nashville, Tennessee, a Washington and Lee alumnus. The transcript was obtained through the courtesy of General J. A. Anderson, professor of civil engineering at the Virginia Military Institute. It follows:

THE CHAIRMAN: The late Hunter McDonald, past-president of the American Society of Civil Engineers, civil engineer of Nashville, Tennessee. The statement on the achievements of Mr. McDonald will be made by Dean Fred J. Lewis, of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.

FRED J. LEWIS: Mr. Chairman, Gentlemen, and Members of the American Society of Civil Engineers, an adopted son of Tennessee has the privilege of presenting to you today a memorial on the illustrious achievements of another of its adopted sons—Hunter McDonald. That son weighs his unworthiness of the assignment, but rejoices in the opportunity of rendering a service in memory of one of the greatest engineers the Volunteer State has known. Moreover, it seems both fitting and proper that arrival for this occasion should have been by way of the Dixie line, the natural monument to the achievement of Mr. McDonald.

Hunter McDonald came from no ordinary stock. His great grandfather, Angus McDonald, named his home near Winchester, Virginia, "Glengarry" after the seat of his clan in Scotland. He had the distinction of having received a land grant from Governor Dinwiddie for valiant service against the Indians in 1754; and again in 1774 he commanded an expedition against the Wappatomica Indians crossing the Ohio River 120 miles below Pittsburgh, this being the advance guard for Lord Dunsmore's army. Hunter's grandfather, also bearing the name of Angus, was a major in the War of 1812, while his father was graduated from West Point Military Academy in 1817, and served until 1819. Later he was brigadier general of the Virginia militia from 1840 to 1861, and together with five of his sons, served in the Confederate Army.

On June 12, 1860, at Winchester, Virginia, Hunter McDonald was born, the youngest son of a family of eighteen—nine by the first marriage, and nine by the second wife—Hunter's mother. Colonel McDonald was 61 when the child was born. A year later he entered the Confederate service and died before the war was over. It is doubtful if Hunter ever knew his own father.

Winchester, which lay in the path of the opposing armies, became too dangerous a location for the family and the McDonalds were refugeed from their ancestral home to a safer haven within the Confederate lines. They settled in Lexington, Virginia, where the family resided for a decade. Later, they again moved, this time taking up their abode in Louisville, Kentucky.

Mr. McDonald gained his early education at the Rugby school in Louisville, from which he was graduated. Entering Washington and Lee University in the fall of 1878 with the intention of becoming an engineer, Mr. McDonald was due for one of his early disappointments. Never robust in health, the demand proved too great for him to withstand, and he was denied the final completion of a formal education, instead, he was forced to seek other channels for his endeavors where he might recoup in body and in strength.

Through the aid of one of his brothers he obtained a position in charge of a small party engaged in making a track survey of the Louisville, Nashville and Great Southern Railroad. Within a month his health was restored and he greatly enjoyed the measurement of the 950 miles of line from Louisville, Kentucky, to Montgomery, Alabama. Many are the anecdotes and stories connected with this first engineering encounter that Hunter McDonald liked so well to relate. He and his crew worked so well that the project was completed by the first of December, 1879.

The reputation gained in this work was to assist him in his next appointment, the first and only assistant to Colonel R. C. Morris, at that time chief engineer of the Nashville, Chatanooga and St. Louis Railroad. Thus began a long and memorable career that was to span the remainder of his active engineering work.

During the early period of his connection with the "Dixie Line" Mr. McDonald was in charge of rebuilding Running Water Viaduct in 1884, at that time the highest railroad viaduct; engineer in charge of construction of the Huntsville branch and changing the gauge of the Duck River Branch to Columbia in 1887-1888. On completion of the work he was appointed division superintendent of the Huntsville Division, and at the same time had charge of surveys and construction of a fifty-mile extension from Huntsville, Alabama, to Gadsden, Alabama, and of the Sequatchie Valley Branch to Pikeville, Tennessee. In 1891 he was appointed resident engineer of the Western and Atlanta Railroad, extending from Atlanta to Chattanooga, Tennessee, which had just been leased from the state of Georgia. This road had to be entirely reconstructed as to track and bridges, and was done under Mr. McDonald's direction.

Upon the death of Colonel Morris in 1891, Hunter McDonald was made chief engineer of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad as his successor. For 41 years he continued in this position, retiring in 1932.

Mr. McDonald had a personal and historical knowledge of the roadway and every bridge and structure on the system, for at one time or another during his career he had to rebuild or remodel practically every item.

Truly it may be said that this road is Mr. McDonald's triumphant achievement for he has practically rebuilt it from one end to the other during his connection with it.

While Mr. McDonald's career is linked so intimately with the development of the Dixie Line he also had other interesting experiences, and made valuable contributions to his community and his profession.

From 1906 onward he had charge of the construction of Cummings Station in Nashville, Tennessee, for the Wholesale Merchant and Warehouse Company, and continued as general manager of the company thereafter. During the regime of governmental operation of the railroads, at the time of the world conflict, he also acted as chief engineer of the Tennessee Central and the Birmingham and Northwestern Railroads; and it is also of interest to know that he was tendered, during the administration of Woodrow Wilson, the position of chief engineer of the Alaskan Railway. However, when a later stipulation was added that he should share this responsibility with two other appointees, he rejected the offer. Mr. McDonald was not averse nor afraid to assume this responsibility, but wanted nothing of divided authority.

Mr. McDonald's active career was mainly engrossed in the field of railway engineering, but he was not too busy to share his knowledge and experience, as well as his good judgment and personal charm, with his fellowman. Indeed, he believed in association with them, and each organization in which he enlisted, recognized his work in honoring him with its offices and assignments.

Mr. McDonald became a Junior Member of the American Society of Civil Engineers in 1883 and a Member in 1888. He served on its board of direction from 1903-1905; was elected vice-president in 1910, and president in 1914.

He was a charter member—No. 11—of the American Railway Engineering Association, and a member of its first board of directors. He served two terms as second vice-president; one as first vice-president, and in 1903 was elected president of that organization, in which capacity he served for two years. He was a member of the Rail and many other important committees, and served faithfully and well, in recognition of which he was elected to honorary membership in July, 1931.

Mr. McDonald was one of a small group of engineers who successfully launched the Engineering Association of the South in 1889, and became one of its first presidents. At the time of the dissolution of this association in 1916, Mr. McDonald was very active in the formation of the Engineering Association of Nashville, an active, cosmopolitan organization of engineers in the city of Nashville, and its adjacent area. As evidence of his interest and capability, he was elected its first president, gave constantly of his services and advice, and on June 10, 1935, became the only honorary member that organization has ever had.

In his contribution through the Engineering Association of Nashville, Mr. McDonald was vice-chairman of the committee which prepared the prospectus advocating the establishment of the nitrate plant, power and navigation dams at Muscle Shoals and rendered valuable service to the city of Nashville in connection with its water supply, the reproduction of the Parthenon, city planning and other municipal problems of an engineering nature.

Jointly, with the late Robert H. McNeilly, Member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, Mr. McDonald was instrumental in the establishment of the Robert H. McNeilly Student Chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers at Vanderbilt University in 1925. It was always an evening of mutual satisfaction and pleasure when Mr. McDonald would visit that chapter. Indeed it seemed that Mr. McDonald was intensely interested in the problem of educating young men in the technical field, perhaps this was because such an education had been denied him in his early manhood.

Mr. McDonald was an inveterate reader and possessed a broad knowledge of literature and art. Indeed it may be said Mr. McDonald was a cultured Southern gentleman in all that name implies, a friend of man and a contributor to engineering knowledge.

To have known Mr. McDonald was to have possessed a prize of great worth—kindly, faithful, frank and fearless in leadership, impeccable in character, and with a delightful personality. One could rightly believe that Edgar Guest had Mr. McDonald in mind when he penned the following closing stanza of his verse "A Real Man":

"Men are of two kinds, and he
Was of the kind I'd like to be.
No door at which he ever knocked
Against his manly form was locked.
If ever man on earth was free
And independent, it was he.
No broken pledge lost him respect,
He met all men with head erect,
And when he passed I think there went
A soul to yonder firmament
So white, so splendid and so fine
It came almost to God's design."

Mr. Chairman, in honoring Hunter McDonald today we honor ourselves.

W. and L. "Takes Over" In Richmond

IF YOU wander around Capitol Hill in Richmond, capital of Virginia, for long you'll meet someone you knew at Washington and Lee, or someone who knows someone at Washington and Lee, or someone who attended school at Washington and Lee. You just won't be able to keep from coming in contact with Washington and Lee men thereabouts.

Why? Because from the Governor on down through the list there are Washington and Lee men, holding down important assignments in directing the affairs of the Old Dominion.

If, in fact, they had set the inauguration on January 19 of Virginia's new governor, James H. Price, to music, the Washington and Lee Swing would of necessity have been the theme song of the ceremonies. Because:

The new governor is a Washington and Lee alumnus—class of 1909. The retiring governor, George C. Peery, member of the Board of Trustees, is an alumnus—class of 1897. The guest of honor for the day, Homer A. Holt—A. B. 1918 and LL. B.

1923—is governor of West Virginia. And the attorney general of Virginia, who swore in the new governor, is Abram P. Staples—LL. B. 1908.

To make the whole inauguration "even more Washington and Lee," it was the anniversary of the birth of General Robert E. Lee, president of Washington College after the War Between the States until his death, and, as all good alumni know, it accordingly was Founder's Day at Washington and Lee.

As if to further the Washington and Lee tradition in and around the capital of the Old Dominion, five new members of the House of Delegates are Washington and Lee alumni. They are, briefly, as follows:

Governor James H. Price

Cralle Fauntleroy Blackwell of Kenbridge, recently elected to fill the Lunenburg County seat in the House. He was graduated in law from Washington and Lee in 1918 and is a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

Henry Prince Burnett of Galax, former commonwealth's attorney of Grayson County. He was graduated from Washington and Lee in 1907, and also attended Roanoke College and V. P. I. He is the only Republican among the 28 new Delegates.

Earl A. Fitzpatrick of Roanoke, who was at Washington and Lee in 1925-1929. Fitzpatrick, a Kappa Sigma, captained the Generals on the football field in 1928.

James Bland Martin of Gloucester, representing Gloucester and Matthews Counties. He was graduated from Washington and Lee in 1931.

Francis Pickens Miller, who is serving his first term as representative from Fairfax. Miller, executive secretary of the National Foreign Policy Committee, was graduated from Washington and Lee in 1914 and went subsequently to Oxford.

It's a high tribute, as someone said not long ago, to the character and ability of Washington and Lee alumni that they should hold so many important positions in the political life of the Old Dominion.

Miss Margaret Woods and W. M. Rogers, Jr., Fancy Dress Leaders

Thirty-Two Years of Fancy Dress

By PAYNE HALL

It was cold and there was a touch of snow in the air, but light bespeaking warmth shone through the high windows behind the tall white columns, casting blurred shadows on the already snow-covered ground. Music, sometimes soft and sauntering as if played for maids and gentlemen of olden times, filtered from within the long, porticoed building.

A streamlined automobile drew up to the entrance and a duke and his duchess alighted and hurried in. Another car followed, and a prince helped his princess up the broad steps. Came other automobiles, and other dignitaries—governors, and their ladies; generals and admirals; even kings and queens.

A conglomerate group, they glittered in the pageant-like brilliance of their costumes as they doffed overcoats and wraps once they had found the warmth behind the tall lighted windows. Then, gay and carefree, they strolled or marched onto the ballroom floor, and danced to modern music.

It was Fancy Dress time at Washington and Lee University. It might have been any Washington and Lee Fancy Dress, at least any of the Fancy Dress balls held in recent years when costumes have become more and more elaborate.

The characters: all make-believe for a night. The scene: Washington and Lee's Doremus Gymnasium, transformed for the night into a royal garden of old Italy; or a ballroom of the Russia of Czarist days; or the court pomp of Elizabethan times.

Or, as it was on January 28, the garden of an old colonial home at Charleston, South Carolina, in the happy days preceding the War Between the States.

"I want something a little more modern, a little more American, this year, and I think the students will like it," William M. Rogers, Jr., of Petersburg, Virginia, president of the Fancy Dress Ball of 1938, said before the ball. "We are not exactly tired of the glitter of European themes of past days. We just think it might be appropriate now to have a Southern theme for the ball."

And so, on the night of January 28, 1938, Rogers became Governor Pickens of South Carolina, host at a reception.

As governor and host, he led the figure, highlight of the ball, with Miss Margaret Woods of Bronxville, New York. Miss Woods is a sophomore at Sweet Briar College.

The annual Washington and Lee Fancy Dress Ball, now one of the best known collegiate social affairs in the nation, had its inception back in 1907 when Miss Annie Jo White, then the University librarian, gave a private costume party for a group of students and their girls. But the private costume party became an idea, and the idea "caught on" with "Miss Annie" continuing for a number of years as director of the ball.

"The boys took the party right out of my hands and have been carrying out the fancy dress idea ever since I started it," "Miss Annie," as she has been known affectionately on the campus, said not long ago.

"But I didn't mind," she added, "because I still get as much fun out of it."

And each year "Miss Annie" has attended the Fancy Dress Ball, sitting as an honored guest and far from forgotten as the "eternal queen of Fancy Dress" at Washington and Lee.

Starting with the idea given them by the then librarian, Washington and Lee students of succeeding generations have placed the ball in an enviable position in the spotlight of social prominence, concentrating at the same time on authenticity in reproduction of famous periods and events in history.

This effort for conscientious reproduction was concentrated in this year's ball on the following historical note, "Charleston on the Eve of Secession," prepared by Professor Ollinger Crenshaw of the Washington and Lee department of History:

"Since the close of the seventeenth century the little city of Charleston, South Carolina, had been a mecca in the rural civilization of the Old South, preeminent for its social and intellectual life, commerce, cosmopolitanism, and authentic urbanity. While by 1860 new economic forces had dimmed somewhat the material prosperity of Carolina civilization, Charleston retained much of its prestige till the fall of the Confederacy. Although there is some difference of opinion among critics as to the merits of ante-bellum Southern civilization, Charleston represented the best of that civilization. It was the metropolis which attracted gifted politicians—in the production of which the old South excelled—including at this time Robert Barnwell Rhett, secessionist par excellence, Governor Francis W. Pickens, ex-Governor W. H. Gist, Senator James H. Hammond, able apologist of "the peculiar institution" of slavery, his colleague, Senator James Chestnut, Jr., and the eminent lawyer James L. Petigru, almost the only unionist in the state.

"Others prominent in various fields of activity and associated with the city in the years before the war for Southern independence included Louis Leconte and the Ravenels, scientists, poets like Paul Hayne and Henry Timrod, Basil L. Gildersleeve, classical scholar, and the foremost Southern novelist of the age, William Gilmore Simms, at last accepted by Charleston society.

"While momentous events took place, and South Carolina prepared secession, the best people of Charleston enjoyed life in their magnificent homes, attended concerts and balls of the famous St. Cecilia Society, and church at old St. Michael's, whose spire remains a landmark to this day. Supremely confident of the future and remarkably unanimous politically, these Carolinians were seemingly oblivious to the dark shadow of the future: they saw not the grave and well-nigh insuperable problems of the new Southern Confederacy, which through war led to the collapse of King Cotton civilization, and finally to bitter days of reconstruction."

The Fancy Dress Ball of 1938 was projected against this picturesque and romantic backdrop of Southern history.

The various persons who were prominent in Charleston society of the middle nineteenth century—including politicians, writers, and others—were portrayed by the students and their girls.

Time was, it was recalled by those who have been to Fancy Dress Balls of past days, when a white shirt, open at the throat, a pair of black tuxedo trousers, and a red scarf tied about the waist may have constituted sufficient costume to represent any period of history. But things have changed in the past decade. All of the costumes are authentic now, created and fitted by professional costumiers. Orders are placed weeks in advance for costumes for both men and women.

Members of the Washington and Lee faculty and distinguished guests usually are the only ones on the dance floor without costume, and it's white ties for them.

The date for Fancy Dress varies only slightly each year; it always comes just after examinations that mark the end of the first semester at the University. The Ball is the highlight now of the winter dance set, which opened this year on Friday evening, January 27, with the annual Junior Prom formal—after which decorators tore down the decorations for the Prom and effected a complete transformation in the interior of Doremus Gymnasium's appearance. The O. D. K. formal was held Saturday evening, January 29.—Reprinted with permission from the Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch Sunday Magazine.

Two New Trustees Elected

THE WASHINGTON AND LEE Board of Trustees, meeting at the University on Founder's Day, January 19, elected two new members to fill vacancies on the Board.

The new trustees are Oscar C. Huffman of New York City, president of the Continental Can Company, and Harry St. George Tucker Carmichael of Kyrock, Kentucky, president of the Kentucky Rock Asphalt Company. Both were students at the University in the late nineties.

Mr. Carmichael is a nephew of the late Congressman Harry St. George Tucker of Virginia, to whom Mr. Huffman was private secretary while a student at Washington and Lee in 1895-1896. Both of the new trustees are native Virginians; Mr. Huffman was born in Augusta County and Mr. Carmichael in Lexington.

Commenting upon the election of the new members of the Board, Dr. Francis P. Gaines said: "In distinction of achievement, in the force of personality and character, and in unselfish devotion to their Alma Mater, these gentlemen enter worthily into the high traditions of the Washington and Lee trustees."

Both new Board members are well known in their respective business fields. Mr. Huffman, moving from Augusta to Buchanan County, organized and headed the Virginia Can Company, and later organized the United States Can Company. He has been president of Continental Can since 1930. Mr. Carmichael, in addition to his business affiliations in Kentucky, is a member of the Kentucky Academy of Science and a fellow of the Royal Academy of Arts, London.

Members of the Board who attended the Founder's Day meeting were: George Walker St. Clair of Tazewell, Virginia, rector; Harrington Waddell of Lexington;

Charles J. McDermott of New York City; James R. Caskie of Lynchburg, Virginia; Dr. George Bolling Lee of New York City; The Rev. Walter Lapsley Carson of Richmond, Va.; William McChesney Martin of St. Louis; Herbert Fitzpatrick of Huntington, West Virginia; Dr. J.

Morrison Hutcheson of Richmond, Virginia; Dr. Gaines and Mr. Penick, the University's treasurer.

The Founder's Day exercises, held in Doremus Gymnasium, were featured by presentation to the University of portraits of two distinguished alumni—the late G. Watson James of Richmond, Virginia, and the late Judge C. C. Garrett of Texas.

The Founder's Day speaker, Sir Herbert B. Ames, formerly financial director of the League of Nations, told the assembly he did not believe another war in Europe was imminent, but said he thought the armaments race would continue until the nations had spent all they could on armaments. The former League official centered much of his address on the Germany under Adolf Hitler, outlining the difficulties facing the German people and the current demands being made by Germany as an aftermath of the World War.

(Editor's note: THE ALUMNI MAGAZINE regrets that no picture of Mr. Carmichael was available for this issue, but promises that his likeness will be reproduced in a subsequent issue.)

G. E. (Ted) Harris, 1923, who has been living in New York City, has accepted an appointment as manager of the East Carolina Broadcasting Company at Greenville, North Carolina, his home town. He plans, he said in a letter to the Alumni Office, to collect material for a novel centering about the tobacco industry in Greenville.

A Review of Winter Sports

By WILLIAM B. BAGBEY, Class of 1938

NO ONE has doubted that Washington and Lee has one of the best basketball teams in the South since the Generals have reached the finals in the Southern Conference tourney at Raleigh for the past four years, but now they have established themselves as one of the top-flight teams of the nation. Though losing to L. I. U. in Madison Square Garden by the score of thirty-five to thirty-two, the Generals showed Manhattan scribes enough to make them think of asking Washington and Lee to the proposed nation-wide inter-collegiate invitation tournament to be held in the Garden in March.

Bob Spessard, Washington and Lee's six foot, seven inch center, definitely stamped himself as in the class of the best in the nation when he led all scoring in the game with Long Island with a total of twelve points. Spessard now has almost 1,000 points to his credit since he began his basketball career at Washington and Lee.

Cy Young has no alibis for the decision his team dropped to the northern school, but there is no doubt that the team was seriously crippled in the opening minute of play when Bill Borries' knee, injured in football, gave way and the big red-head had to be taken out of the game. Borries has shown a fighting spirit which should place him among basketball greats at Washington and Lee, despite the fact that he has been able to play little ball this season. When his knee went out of place in the second game of the year, it looked like Bill was through with athletics. Then Bill joined the swimming team, and splashed around the pool in right good form, too. Then bad luck struck at the basketball team again and Kit Carson, co-captain with Bob Spessard of the Washington and Lee five, sprained his ankle just before one of the season's toughest games with the Generals' old rivals, North Carolina. Immediately Borries offered his services to the basketball team again, and to the surprise and delight of the crowd which packed Doremus Gymnasium for the battle with the Tar Heels, Bill was not only in uniform but scored five points for his team and played a very good floor game. Despite the efforts of Borries and Spessard, who scored eighteen points, the North Carolina team defeated the Generals by thirty-four to thirty-one.

Earl "Kit" Carson, co-captain of the team, and like Spessard an all-Southern player, has been inspiring in his leadership this season. Carson, though not the high-scorer that Spessard is, plays one of the most beautiful floor games in this section.

Two new-comers to the outfit this season have definitely won varsity positions. They are: Leo Reinartz, a forward, and Ronnie Thompson, a guard, both sophomores. Thompson plays a fine defensive game, and both are excellent shots from out in mid-court. Thompson is from Rockville Centre, New York, and looks and plays like his fellow townsman, Joe Pette, who was captain of the Washington and Lee team two years ago. Thompson's aggressive play won the praise of New York writers as did the uncanny set-shots of Spessard.

So far this season the Generals have dropped only four games. Elon took the measure of the Generals in the first game after Christmas holidays by a score of twenty-nine to twenty-five. Their other defeats at the hands of North Carolina and Long Island University, by three-point margins, and Maryland, who had been defeated earlier in the year, by four points.

Eight games remain on the schedule before the Southern Conference tournament at Raleigh in March. Richmond will play at Lexington on February 8; then the Generals will travel over to Roanoke to play the fast-stepping Roanoke Maroons, an outfit which can be classed with the best teams in the country this season. An over-capacity crowd is expected for this game which will see Bob Spessard placed on the spot as he performs before a home-town crowd.

Bob Spessard

After Roanoke College, the Generals will go to Lynchburg, where they will play Duke's Blue Devils in the Lynchburg Armory. The Duke game is scheduled for February 14, and on February 17, Washington and Lee travels down into Tarheelia, where they will meet North Carolina's White Phantoms in a return engagement at Chapel Hill. On February 19 they play V. P. I. at Blacksburg; on February 21, William and Mary at Williamsburg; and on February 22, Richmond at Richmond. Then on February 26, Virginia will appear in Doremus Gymnasium for a double-header with both the varsity and freshman teams in action. In an earlier game at Charlottesville the Generals defeated the Cavaliers forty to twenty and played from the opening minutes without Kit Carson, who sprained his ankle immediately after the game began.

Washington and Lee basketball fans may begin to worry as the season draws to a close and Bob Spessard, Kit Carson, Frank Frazier, and other dependables on the Big Blue are playing their last games for Washington and Lee. But don't get downhearted, for the freshman squad is one of the best in years. Bill Ellis, freshman coach, not only has one good team but he has three or four.

Dick Pinck, flashy quarterback on the Brigadier football squad, performs even greater feats on the basketball court. In only one game this season has Pinck failed to score twenty points or more. Against Danville High in the opening game of the year, he scored fourteen points, and since that time he has been high scorer in each game. In five games he has a total of ninety-nine points to his credit.

Howard Dobbins, an outstanding performer at end on the freshman football squad, has proved a fine court prospect to take Bob Spessard's place next season. Dobbins is an excellent ball-handler and uses his height to advantage in follow-up shots. Dobbins is from Louisville Male High, while Pinck is from Paterson, New Jersey, and prepped at Hun School.

Another capable performer on the finest frosh basketball squad in this section is Ed Cuttino of Sumter, South Carolina. As the running-mate of Pinck at forward, Cuttino has scored thirty-six points so far this season.

Other outstanding members of this frosh outfit, which scored two hundred and thirty-five points in five games to their opponents' one hundred and sixteen, are Bob Gary of Beaumont, Texas, a forward; Bob Blanding, Roanoke, Virginia, guard; George Gassman, Freeport, Illinois, forward; Bob Stein, Louisville, Kentucky, guard; Jack Read, Cumberland, Maryland, guard; Fred Farrar, Garden City, New York, forward; Ed Trice, Glens Falls, New York, guard; and Kiah Ford, Lynchburg, Virginia, a guard.

Remaining on the freshman schedule are games with S. M. A. in Lexington on February 7; A. M. A. there on February 10; Jefferson High in Roanoke, February 12; Roanoke College freshmen here on February 16; V. P. I. there, February 19; Roanoke there, February 22; William and Mary in Lexington, February 25; Virginia at Lexington, a double-header with both freshman and varsity games with Virginia, on February 26; and Greenbrier here, February 28.

Not since the National Collegiate wrestling tournament was held in Doremus Gymnasium in 1936 has there been the array of fine wrestling teams in Lexington that will meet Coach Archie Mathis' undefeated grapplers in Doremus Gymnasium this season. The wrestlers, co-holders with V. M. I. of the Southern Conference mat crown, have disposed of two opponents in handy fashion already. They defeated North Carolina State here on January 15 by a score of 22 to 8, and on February 4 took North Carolina by a score of 23½ to 4½, dropping only the 118-pound bout and getting a draw in the 175 class.

Bill Borries

Princeton's Tigers will invade Lexington on February 12, and Mathis is determined that his squad will gain revenge for the only setback of last season at the hands of Princeton in a meet at the latter's school. Working out as often as twice daily, the grapplers will be in fighting trim by the time of the Princeton bout. After meeting the Tigers, Washington and Lee engages Davidson at Davidson on February 16, and then meets one of the nation's leading teams, Kansas State in Doremus gymnasium on February 22. V. P. I. will be the last opponent for the matmen before Washington and Lee goes to Blacksburg to defend its crown in the conference mat tourney. The Tech meet will be held in Doremus Gymnasium on February 26.

Captain of the Washington and Lee mat squad this season is Calvert Thomas of Baltimore, Maryland, who wrestles in the 155-pound division. Calvert is a brother of Rowland Thomas, captain of the Washington and Lee wrestling team two years ago and for three years Southern Conference champion in the 118-pound class.

Other experienced wrestlers on whom Mathis will call for service against Princeton and Kansas State are Bob Kemp, 126 pounds, a junior and one of the most scientific grapplers on the squad; Charles Eaton, a fine performer at 135 pounds; and Charles Lykes, who has wrestled heavyweight in previous matches this year, but who will probably come down to 175 pounds for the two leading matches of the season. In the 118-pound division Mathis has Bob Summerall and Harry Crane, both juniors, but with little varsity wrestling experience. Crane is an intramural wrestler who gave up basketball a few weeks ago for wrestling. He made his letter last season on the basketball squad which won the Southern Conference championship. Chris Nielsen, a senior; Charles Bowles, a junior; and Jack Broome, Granville, Farrier, and Henry Braun, sophomores, are other men who will see action during the season.

The freshman wrestlers, with four victories to their credit this season, are keeping clean the record of frosh wrestling teams at Washington and Lee, which have not dropped a meet in the last ten years. This remarkable record is almost equalled by the varsity squad, which has lost only five meets and has tied one in the last ten years. In fact the prowess of Coach Archie Mathis' wrestling teams attracted a few days ago the cameramen of several newsreel companies to the Washington and Lee campus to take pictures of the matmen in action. In the past ten years the varsity and frosh squads together have won 102 meets, lost five, and tied two. In 1933, 1934, and 1936, the Generals won the Southern Conference mat crown; in 1935 they were second to V. M. I., and in 1937 they were co-holders with V. M. I. of the championship.

Randolph Hanna, Birmingham, Alabama; Ed Wagg, Lambertville, New Jersey; Gordon von Kalinowski, Webster Groves, Missouri; and John Preston, Paris, Kentucky, are outstanding members of the frosh mat squad this season.

With a 64-10 victory over Randolph-Macon to their credit already this season, Coach Cy Twombly hopes that his swimming team can successfully defend the Southern Conference championship which they won for the third straight year last March. With Co-Captain Gil Meem as conference champion in the 220 and 440, and Co-Captain Paul Lavietes as conference champion in the back stroke, Twombly has a strong nucleus around which to center his defense of the conference crown. Lettermen from last year are Bob Watt of Chicago, Illinois, a diver; George Vanta, New York; Gary Hiers, New York; and Vance Funk, Vincennes, Indiana, dashes; Tom Tennant, Chicago, breast stroke; and Bob Finn, Niagara Falls, and Charles Hart, New York, back stroke.

In Brent Farber of Baltimore, Maryland, and Bill Ball of Jacksonville, Florida, Twombly has very capable sophomore performers who will be worked into the places of members of last year's squad which was hit hard by graduation.

Five meets remain on the varsity swim schedule: The Generals will go to Blacksburg on February 8, where they will meet V. P. I.; Duke is scheduled in Lexington on February 12; William and Mary at Williamsburg on February 19; and Virginia at Lexington on February 26.

It might be pointed out in closing that if any of you would like to get a look at six Washington and Lee teams in action on the same day, February 26 is the day to visit the Washington and Lee campus. On that day the varsity and freshman basketball and swimming teams will meet the varsity and freshman court and tank teams of the University of Virginia, and the varsity and freshman wrestling teams will meet V. P. I.'s two mat teams in Doremus Gymnasium. February 26 is a good time for the "second Homecoming" of the year.

(Editor's note: Since the above was written, the Washington and Lee varsity basketball team has defeated Richmond by a score of 33-30 and lost to Roanoke and Duke in Roanoke and Lynchburg, respectively. The Generals were outclassed on an off night against the fast-moving, nationally ranked Roanoke squad, 45-23; against Duke they were still in a slump and lost 48-39 to a keen-shooting Blue Devil squad. The freshman basketball team has continued its winning streak by adding four victories to its imposing string. They have whipped in succession, S. M. A., A. M. A., Jefferson High of Roanoke, and Roanoke College's "Little Maroons." The Brigadiers turned the "Little Maroons" a pale pink, and with Dick Pinck on a scoring rampage set them back 72-16.)

(The Generals seemed assured of another trip to the Southern Conference tournament as a result of their 61-40 victory over William and Mary, February 21.)

Chats With Your Friends and Mine

By CY YOUNG, Alumni Secretary

AGAIN I find myself wondering what would interest you most in the panorama of events that pass so rapidly here on the campus at Washington and Lee. It seems only yesterday when we were all excited over the incoming freshman class and the many events that crowd the opening of school in September. It wasn't long before we were planning for Homecoming and your return. Before we realized it, football season was over and Christmas was upon us, and now Fancy Dress and mid-winter exams are a thing of the past.

This issue of the Magazine is a little later this year. In the corresponding issue of last year, which was published in January, I had the opportunity to acknowledge the many Christmas cards received in the Alumni Office, commenting on each one. Even if it is late, I would like to acknowledge and say how much I appreciated greetings from:

Allein Beall, Fred Palmer, Pin Webster, Stan Higgins, Walter Wilkins, Norman Iler, Ki Williams, Ed Campbell, Earl Tilton, Ev Tucker, Beverly Smith, Dan Gholson, Bob McDougle, Marvin Hummer, Joe Pette, Ed Caffrey, Lyne Smith, Amos Bolen, Pete Friedel, Malcolm Bruce, Stu Wurzbarger, Allen Morgan, Walter McDonald, Don Hostetter, Rube Lewis, Fanning Hearon.

Since our last Chat I have been doing a good deal of traveling. I attended a smoker in Washington, and as usual, this annual event was very enjoyable. Classes from "way-back" up to the present were represented. All present were surprised and quite delighted to have with us Hi Dow, 1907, from Roswell, New Mexico. Hi was in Washington on business and took advantage of this Washington and Lee gathering to meet with many of his old friends. He is now practicing law in Roswell and is Lieutenant-Governor of the state of New Mexico. I learn that he is quite a power politically, and doubtless we will hear further from him. Hi will be remembered as an outstanding football player and one of the most popular men on the campus of his day.

I talked at length with our good friend Rhea Whitley, 1927. Perhaps some of you do not know that Rhea has made quite a name for himself as an Agent (G-man to you) in the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Until his recent resignation he was in charge of the New York area and assistant to Mr. Hoover. He liked the work, but, having taken unto himself a bride, thought he had better get out while the getting was good. He has opened law offices in the Southern Building, Washington, District of Columbia.

At this meeting Ed Campbell stepped down as President of the local chapter, and Dozier Devane took over the reins. Ed has done an outstanding job for the alumni in the National Capital, and I know that Dozier will carry on. I have leaned heavily on these two men for a great many years and neither has ever failed me. Charlie Suter, the new Vice-President, has done yeoman service and is one of our younger alumni who is really active.

From Washington I went to Baltimore for their annual fall meeting. As in the past, Johnny Mead put on one of the best parties ever—a big turn-out with plenty of pep. Johnny was succeeded as president of this fine group by our good friend Jim Milbourne. His second in command will be Phil Seraphine, another of the younger alumni who is on the job.

I have been in New York on two occasions since November—one to attend an alumni meeting, the other to take our basketball team to Madison Square Garden, where we played Long Island University. After several years of holding the alumni meetings at the St. Regis and the Ambassador, the alumni of the metropolis decided to go back down town, and met at the LaFayette. The next time you are in New York if you want French food I can recommend this hostelry most highly. I have had a good many good meals in France, but for French cooking, I prefer the LaFayette.

Emmett Poindexter, Ed Lee and Wop Walton succeeded in having a big turnout for this meeting. It had been several years since I attended a New York meeting and I found this one to be up to standard. We were fortunate in having present Mr. John M. Glenn, 1879. He made a most interesting talk, telling us of Washington and Lee in the late seventies. Some time ago Mr. Glenn sent the Alumni Office two telegrams which he had received when a student here, from W. A. Wimbish, who was manager of the baseball team in the spring of 1878, announcing a victory over Virginia. The wires are interesting for many reasons—the ancient dates, the fact that they are written in long-hand (being before the day of typewriters). These wires have been framed and are hanging on the wall in Dick Smith's office in the Gymnasium. They read as follows:

“Charlottesville, Va., May 20, 1878:

“Score stands end of fourth inning W. & L. 9, University naught. Hurrah!”

“Charlottesville, Va., May 20, 1878:

“School victorious. Score twelve to 0. W. & L. victory.”

I enjoyed an after-meeting gathering with some of my old cronies—Buck Miles, Ricky Burton, and Brook Barber. It seemed that I met all night. After dismissing these Unholy Three, I went on to the New Yorker with Stu Wurzburger, Bill Owen, and Leigh Bullock.

I mentioned above that our basketball team had been to New York to play in Madison Square Garden. If I had not been so excited about the basketball game I could fill this column by listing the names of alumni who greeted me and our team. Babe Spotts, whom you will remember as quite a basketball player himself while in college, and is now teaching and coaching at Adelphi Academy, gave us a lot of assistance. He had seen the Long Island team play several games this year and his scouting was helpful. The same applied to Joe Pette, our basketball captain of 1936. Frank Urney, another ex-basketball player, was on hand. Bill Hyman, Clarence Sager, Junius Powell, Allan McDowell, and apparently hundreds of others, because every time we scored a basket the applause was deafening, indicating that a large number among the 11,000 present were Washington and Lee men. I am sure that most of you know that we were defeated 35 to 32, but I am so happy to report that our team put up an excellent game under the most trying circumstances. Madison Square Garden is to basketball what the Rose Bowl is to football, and it is very trying on a bunch of youngsters to perform before so many people. I might add it is also quite trying on their coach. The boys were very nervous at the beginning, but settled down and played a real basketball game. We were leading by three points with only a few minutes to play. The New York papers were very complimentary in their accounts of the game.

Elsewhere in this issue you will find that on January 19 the University Board of Trustees elected two new members to this distinguished body, viz Harry St. George Tucker Carmichael, 1899, and Oscar C. Huffman, 1900.

I have talked with a great many alumni since the election of these men and I hardly see how a more popular selection could have been made. Harry and Oscar have for years been very active and interested in the things pertaining to Washington and Lee, and this column congratulates the Board on the addition of these two new members.

Several weeks ago we were delighted to have a day's visit from Thornton Allen. Thornton was back on the campus renewing old friendships in addition to doing some research work on his most famous composition, the Washington and Lee Swing. There has been a lot written about this well-known song, but Thornton gave us so many interesting side lights we had never heard of.

I dropped by the Corner Store one night not long ago and who should be there but Hunter (the Senator) Osborne, with Mrs. Osborne. They were just passing through on their way home from a trip through West Virginia. Hunter told us of a party or two he had had with a few of his former Washington and Lee friends, among them Joe Holt in Clarksburg and Johnny Morrison in Charleston. He told us his “side-kick” Jeb Stuart is now located in Sunset, Pennsylvania, and doing quite well in the canning business. Who of you of the early twenties don't remember this pair?

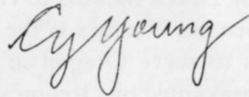

Along about this same time we were pleased to have a visit from Eddy Lyons en route to Richmond, Virginia, from Detroit to attend the annual meeting of the American Chemical Society. Eddie pays us a visit about once a year, and we are always delighted to see him. Joe Copper also visited his family some time back and brought us lots of news from alumni in Birmingham, Alabama.

The records say that on January 28 the Thirty-second Annual Fancy Dress Ball was held in Doremus Gymnasium. I haven't seen all of them, but I have missed very few since 1914. Each year we think the ball more beautiful than ever, and this year was no exception. The setting was a Charleston, South Carolina, garden before the Civil War days. The garden was surrounded by a very realistic brick wall pierced by iron gateways and draped with vines and climbing roses. The trees were there, the moss was there—in fact everything was there except the scene of magnolia blossoms. The costumes of those taking part in the figure, who entered from the Colonial portico, were of the period, and were graceful and becoming.

I am happy to say that Miss Annie Jo White, the originator of the ball and friend of hundreds of alumni, was able to be present.

The alumni representation at this function was mostly from recent classes. I wish it were possible for all of our alumni to see this outstanding social event of Washington and Lee. At this time of the year it is not convenient for many alumni to attend a University Function, but it is not too soon, however, for you to start planning to be with us at Finals, and especially if your class is having a reunion. The dates are June 8, 9, and 10. Mark these dates on your calendar. If you are your own boss there are few excuses for your absence—if you are not, put in your application now for a vacation at this time. Early in May you will receive a bulletin giving full particulars, and before that time your class agent will be writing you and will also call these dates to your attention.

Marriages

The REV. WILLIAM W. GLASS, JR., B. A. 1929, of Winchester and Halifax, Virginia, and Miss Ruth Kathleen Elkins of Elkton, North Carolina, were married last November at the Elkton, North Carolina, Presbyterian Church.

KENNETH AUBURN GOODE, B. A. 1925, and Miss Dorothy Ethel Stanton were married last November at Cleveland Heights, Ohio. They are at home at 3507 Northcliffe Road, Cleveland Heights.

JAMES OWEN WATTS, A. B. 1936, was married December 18, 1937, to Miss Sara Webb Key in the Chapel of St. Bartholomew's, New York City. They live in Cambridge, Massachusetts, where Mr. Watts is attending the Harvard Law School.

EDWARD WALLACE BRENT, 1933, was married to Miss Jean Williams McMillan on February 4, in Louisville, Kentucky. They will make their home in Paris, Kentucky.

TUPPER SWANDALE ALLEN, 1933, was married February 3 to Miss Jane Blair at Kenosha, Wisconsin.

In Memoriam

ASHLEY CABELL, 86, retired attorney and first Jury Commissioner of St. Louis, died at his home in that city January 3. He attended Washington College one year while General Lee was its president; received his LL. B. in 1873.

Mr. Cabell was born in Washington, D. C., the son of a congressman from Florida. After serving as Jury Commissioner at St. Louis he became president of the American School Book Company, returning to his law practice in 1897. In 1905, he was president of the Missouri Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

Mr. Cabell's father, Edward Arrington Cabell, was a member of the class of 1833 at Washington College.

Local Alumni Association Notes

LOUISVILLE

NINETEEN alumni attended a "Lee Day Banquet" held by Louisville alumni on January 19 at the Brown Hotel. Professor Clayton Williams of the Washington and Lee Law School addressed the alumni, after which a brief talk was given by Professor W. S. Milburn, principal of the Louisville Male High School, with Mr. Williams and Dr. C. W. Karraker, who were guests at the banquet.

W. R. Knebelkamp, 1921, presided in the absence of President John J. Davis, who was ill. Those present included: Thos. C. Nugent, Jr., 1938; Murrel D. Klein, 1925; Peel Rivers, 1933; Ed. Axton, Jr., 1938; John W. May, Jr., 1916; Ernest S. Clarke, Jr., 1928; N. C. Evans, 1916; Greenberry Simmons, 1927; W. R. Knebelkamp, 1921; Bob Foree, Jr., 1927.

G. R. Smiley, 1902; Geo. Burks, 1927; Martin Z. Kaplan, 1936; Farris A. Sampson, 1903; Arthur Tabb, 1904; Edw. A. Dodd, 1926; R. A. Bate, Jr., 1928; Henry K. Hill, 1925; Wm. F. Chandler, 1929; and Charles D. Mercke, 1929.

ST. LOUIS

TWENTY-SEVEN alumni and ten students attended a Washington and Lee alumni luncheon at St. Louis December 28. William McC. Martin, member of the Board of Trustees, addressed the meeting, talking on various activities of the University, especially from the trustees' viewpoint.

John L. Patterson, president of the St. Louis alumni, has projected plans for a series of informal monthly luncheons and issuance of a monthly bulletin on alumni activities in the city and vicinity. The bulletins would be issued about two days prior to the luncheons.

Alumni who attended the December 28 luncheon were: Charles H. Reasor, Tom Cowan Atwood, George F. Atwood, Maury A. Jones, David F. Crossen, James H. Woods, Norman R. Thurston, F. M. Robinson, Jr., Burchard S. Pruett.

James O. Phelps, Jr., Oswood H. Peckham, Joseph R. Long, John A. Newton, Edward H. Miller, Wm. McC. Martin, W. C. Magruder, Jr., Henry S. Hartzog, Wm. C. Edwards.

Wm. P. Diggs, L. D. Danforth, Edwin H. Bacon, C. E. Allen, Jr., H. D. McNew, Lawrence Howerton, M. H. Braun, Earl Thompson, Jr., John L. Patterson.

Those present now attending the University were: Jos. B. Edwards, David B. Galt, Landon Jones, Sam P. McChesney, Jr., Douglas B. Remmers, Joseph M. Stewart, G. E. von Kalinowski, Robert M. White, II, D. W. Wilkinson, Lloyd B. Worner, Jr.

the even-tempered, likable young lawyer became private secretary to Postmaster General Wilson, but in 1897 set up a private practice in his home town, Martinsburg, West Virginia; he was born there December 3, 1871.

Although very successful in law practice at Martinsburg, he soon succumbed to the lure of politics, and in 1902 was elected City Solicitor for Cleveland, Ohio. He was married that year to Miss Elizabeth Leopold.

He held the important Cleveland position until 1912, when he advanced still further in his climb to the top by becoming mayor of the city of Cleveland. He was re-elected in 1914, and gained such recognition that he was appointed Secretary of War by President Wilson at the conclusion of his term in 1916. It was in this capacity that he won for himself fame that will never die.

In 1921 he resigned from the President's cabinet, leaving behind him an enviable record—one of great war-time deeds done by a man who naturally loved and fostered peace.

Mr. Baker returned to private practice after turning in his resignation, but concentrated most of his efforts toward the betterment of international relations. He attended the World Court of Arbitration at The Hague in 1928, and was one of the strongest advocates of the League of Nations. He led a gallant but futile fight for the United States to join the League in 1924, climaxed by a brilliant but still futile speech before the Democratic Convention of that year.

He realized that the League of Nations was far from a perfect set-up, but declared, "If we wait for a perfect League we shall have to wait until we have gone to Heaven."

His efforts toward establishing more friendly relations between the great powers of the world won him distinction in 1933, when he was awarded a medal "for services to humanity" by the National Institute of Social Sciences.

Although leading an active political and business life, the famous statesman never forgot his home life. He loved to garden, to aid in the preparation of meals, and to enjoy all the comforts of a real home. He spent many evenings settled down by a log fire reading, being an ardent devotee of literature and art.

His considerate and amicable personality won him many friends, both among neighbors and business acquaintances. Mr. Baker had a keen sense of humor and often exchanged anecdotes with friends, his sharp and penetrating mind often getting the best of them.

He died peacefully at his home at 2 p. m. Christmas Day, his family at his bedside.

Named to U. S. Senate

ALFRED EVAN REAMES of Medford, Oregon, who received his LL. B. from Washington and Lee in 1893, has been appointed to the United States Senate to serve out the unexpired term of Frederick Steiwer, whose resignation became effective February 1. The term has approximately eleven months to run.

Senator Reames is the first Democrat in a number of years to serve Oregon in the United States Senate. He was appointed by Oregon's Governor Martin, a Democrat, and in following Steiwer he succeeds one of the staunchest Republican critics of the Roosevelt administration.

Senator Reames, well known throughout Oregon, was educated at the University of the Pacific at San Jose, California, and at the University of Oregon as well as at Washington and Lee.

He entered private law practice when leaving school and subsequently became district attorney in his home county, then a member of the Democratic Central Committee's Executive Committee.

Senator Reames was quoted as saying he does not intend to enter the May primaries.

Opens Washington Office

RHEA WHITLEY, LL. B. 1927, formerly special agent in charge of the New York office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, has opened offices in Washington, D. C., "for the general practice of law." His offices are located in the Southern Building.

Whitley was stationed in Seattle, Atlanta, Philadelphia, San Francisco, and St. Louis before going to New York in 1934, where he wrote an outstanding successful chapter in the history of the FBI as chief of the metropolitan office.

He was a "G-man" for ten years after leaving Washington and Lee, and participated in some of the most noteworthy cases on the FBI's records, including the hunt for John Dillinger and various phases of the Lindbergh kidnapping.

Whitley was married last October to Miss Peggy Douglas of Washington, D. C., whom he first met when she was a student at Sweet Briar; and he was an undergraduate at Washington and Lee. He is a native of Jonesboro, Arkansas.

At the time of his retirement from the FBI, one newspaper quoted Whitley as saying he considered Clyde Barrow, Bonnie Parker, Verne Miller, and Baby Face Nelson the most dangerous criminals during his decade of crime detection for the Department of Justice.

His pet peeve, the same newspaper said in an interview with him, is "G-Men as depicted in the movies."
