I consider the proper education of youth one of the most important objects now to be obtained, and one of which the greatest benefits may be expected. Nothing will compensate us for the depression of the standard of our moral and intellectual culture, and each state should take the most energetic measures to revive its schools and colleges, and if possible, to increase the facilities of instruction, and to elevate the standard of living.

University Marks 100th Anniversary of Lee's Death _____ 33

Published quarterly by Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia 24450. Entered as second class mail at Lexington, Virginia 24450, with additional mailing privileges at Washington, D.C. 20013. All communications and P.O.D. Forms 3579 should be addressed to Office of Publications, Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia 24450.

At first glance, the contents of this issue of W&L may seem to have little relationship. But in reality, the four major articles are so closely intertwined that they can't be separated. Three of the articles treat of those who gave: Mrs. duPont, the University's greatest benefactor in modern times; Robert E. Lee, who, although he had little material wealth, gave of his inexhaustible inner strength and character; and finally, those alumni, parents, trustees, friends, corporations, and foundations who last year gave in excess of $1.3 million that the University may advance.

It is the fourth article — "The Little Man: A Forgotten Cause" — that tells why such gifts are important. You won't find the death of a college in the obituary columns of your morning paper, but last year, it is estimated, approximately 100 of our independent, privately-supported colleges closed their doors or merged with other institutions. This is occurring at one of the most affluent times in history, and in a day when the percentage of students attending college is higher than it has been in the history of any nation. It is for this reason that the University is grateful for your financial support.

On the cover: When Lee became president of Washington College in 1865, one of the greatest problems he faced was to find the funds to keep the College alive. He sought financial support by making personal appeals, by writing letters, by educating aides to plead for funds. The quotation on the front cover is taken from one of his letters. The message is as valid today as it was over a century ago.

Mrs. Alfred I. duPont

Mrs. Alfred I. duPont was cited in 1952 as the nation's "outstanding woman philanthropist in the field of education and charities." Indeed, she was Washington and Lee University's greatest benefactor in modern times.

She expended much of her large inheritance to help many educational institutions in the South, to provide for the care and treatment of crippled children and elderly persons, and to make possible important historical restorations.

"Much of her time has been spent in thinking and planning how she can do good for others," a close associate said of her in 1964. "I am sure there are few who have inherited wealth who have spent more time in soundly and intelligently planning for the good this wealth can do than Mrs. duPont."

Over the last 30 years, her gifts to Washington and Lee alone amounted to some $7 million. She created several substantial scholarship funds, to which she added considerable sums frequently, and contributed several million dollars to various programs and for unexpected special needs. "Her interest in Washington and Lee," said President Robert E. R. Huntley, "made so many good things possible." She believed that money invested in the education of youth pays the greatest dividends of any investment which can be made.

In 1947, Washington and Lee bestowed upon her the honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters. In 1959, she was named to the University's Board of Trustees. duPont Hall, completed in 1955, was named in her honor.

Mrs. duPont was born in Northumberland County, Virginia, on January 20, 1884. She became a school teacher at the age of 18. In 1921, she became the third wife of Alfred I. duPont, organizer of E. I. duPont de Nemours and Co. He died in 1935.

In recent years, Mrs. duPont had been in declining health and lived in seclusion at Nemours, the family estate, near Wilmington, Delaware. There, on September 26, she died of pneumonia.

President Huntley, expressing "deep and personal sadness" upon learning of her death, said the "kindness and love of this wonderful lady" will continue to influence "countless student generations" at Washington and Lee University.

The Board of Trustees, at its meeting on October 9, adopted the following resolution in her memory:

Mrs. Alfred I. duPont

Across the vast span of Washington and Lee University's history and its influence upon young American manhood, the University has drawn about it a circle of friends whose very names bespeak lives of devotion and service to this nation and to the education of its youth.

Surely no other name stands out more clearly than Mrs. Alfred I. duPont.

Throughout her long affiliation with this institution, her name became synonymous with the strength and vitality of Washington and Lee's educational enterprise. Its best students are sustained by scholarships that she established and nurtured; its best professors have been inspired and rewarded by her philanthropic generosity. She is, of all those who have built this University, its foremost benefactor.

Yet, her most notable contributions to the on-going life of Washington and Lee were not entirely those of substance. She gave generously of her service and of her spirit. Ten years ago she became the first woman ever elected to Trusteeship of Washington and Lee; in the ensuing years she brought to this Board qualities of leadership, wisdom, insight, and understanding that have been characteristic only of its best members.

When Mrs. duPont's health no longer permitted her to take an active role in the Board's meetings and important deliberations, her colleagues and associates on the Board noted her absence with sorrow and growing concern. Now, with her death on September 26, 1970, their sadness is complete, their sense of loss overpowering.

By this simple testament, given this October 9, 1970, the Board of Trustees at once declares its grief at the passing of its loveliest and most charming member, reaffirms its gratitude for the beneficence she bestowed upon Washington and Lee University, and confirms its faith that she, who brought love, charity, and inspiration to so many, now shares in that greater reward that is assured to all who live such lives of consecration to God's purpose.

REPORT OF GIFTS

One hundred years ago the Board of Trustees of Washington College took note of the great legacy that had been left to the College and to the South — even to the entire United States — by Robert E. Lee. The exact occasion was the meeting of the Board following Lee's death on October 12, 1870. The Board's action was to change the institution's name from Washington College to Washington and Lee University.

The anniversary of the death of Robert E. Lee and the renaming of the College are being observed by official campus events in this centennial year.

The question sometimes is asked: "What's in a name?" For Washington and Lee, the answer to that question comes easily. The University's name records in perpetuity the generosity of the heart and spirit of two Americans. Washington gave financially to then Liberty Hall Academy, saying, "To promote literature in this rising empire, and to encourage the arts, have ever been amongst the warmest wishes of my heart." Lee gave his wisdom and great personal strength in a task that he hoped would be "advantageous to the College and country."

This centennial year recalls the gifts of Washington and Lee. The anniversary also reminds us that a private institution is, by definition, one that depends entirely on the support from those who believe in it and who understand the extent to which their generosity will benefit the school.

Lee, though modest, must have imagined what his gift to Washington College could be. Indeed, he apparently saw his gift as being relevant to America as a whole. He wrote, "I think it the duty of every citizen to do all in his power to aid in the restoration of peace and harmony, and in no way to oppose the policy of the State or General Governments directed to that object." His gifts endure today.

Yet, all that George Washington and Robert E. Lee gave to the University would have been dissipated long ago except for the continuing generosity of tens of thousands of persons who followed. Most notable among these was Jessie Ball duPont, whose passing came almost one hundred years after Lee's. She, too, came to the aid of the University following a wasting war that had all but closed the doors of Washington and Lee. She, too, must have realized what her gifts could do. And, like Washington and like Lee, her gifts meant the survival of the University.

There have been many, many others who gave. The pages that follow in this magazine record the generosity of those alumni, parents, friends, foundations, and corporations that enabled Washington and Lee to continue to grow last year. Each gift had its impact; each would have been sorely missed. All were in the great tradition of American philanthropy and followed the examples of George Washington, Robert E. Lee, and Jessie Ball duPont.

THE ROBERT E. LEE ASSOCIATES

Over the long reach of Washington and Lee University's history, one man stands above all others in the manner of his influence upon the institution. No student who has attended Washington and Lee in over one hundred years has been untouched by the personal ideals and the educational foresight of Robert E. Lee.

In the fall of 1967 the Board of Trustees of Washington and Lee University, therefore, found it fitting that the University's most generous and loyal benefactors be brought together and acknowledged as the Robert E. Lee Associates.

Among the purposes of the Robert E. Lee Associates are these:

To enable the University to recognize and honor those persons whose support of Washington and Lee and whose enthusiasm for its role in higher education are unmistakably above the ordinary.

To provide a focus of leadership that will give direction and impetus to all of the University's annual giving programs.

To bring to the University each year a substantial sum of money that will be a cornerstone of strength in meeting the University's constant challenge to sustain its reputation as an institution of truly distinctive merit.

The Robert E. Lee Associates will take an honored position in the Lee Centennial Year observances on campus this year, and the Association plans a special effort during the fiscal 1970-1971 period to benefit the University.

When the charter year expired on December 31, 1968, an impressive number of 170 persons had become Robert E. Lee Associates. New members of the Associates are always welcome. The Trustees declared that the Robert E. Lee Associates should be kept a perpetual assemblage. Since the charter year's end on December 31, 1968, 92 persons have become members, 18 of whom have joined the Associates by contributing at the one thousand dollar level this year. The aggregate giving of the 240 persons who are now Robert E. Lee Associates has now passed the one million dollar mark.

The University could not open its doors for day-to-day operations if it were not for the continuing annual gifts received from alumni, parents, friends, corporations, and foundations. Nearly half of Washington and Lee's revenues result from the gifts of generous, interested persons. The athletic program and the work of the Computer Center are just two of the myriad activities of the University that are supported in this way.

ANNUAL ALUMNI FUND

On the one hand, 1969-70 was a year of success; on the other hand it wasn't. Monetarily, the Fund failed to equal last year's total, falling short by $4,026. But the number of contributors, a very important index indeed, was up by 95 contributors to a total of 4,286. The 1970-71 year will be one of the utmost importance. First, Washington and Lee must have a $325,000 Alumni Fund to balance the University's educational budget. Second, the entire Washington and Lee family — alumni, parents, friends, students, faculty, and staff — need the encouragement that a successful effort will bring. These are not the easiest times. Hard work is needed by all concerned.

*One of the first friends to come to the aid of General Lee during his presidency of Washington College was the Virginia-born inventor, Cyrus H. McCormick.
The University library is named in his honor and in recognition of the beneficence of Cyrus McCormick and the continuing generosity of the McCormick family.*

The Early-Fielding University Center was made possible by the estates of Mrs. Annie Fielding Early and Mrs. Annie Early Fairfax. This is an example of how Washington and Lee has been able to move ahead in many areas over the past 221 years because of generous bequests. Shown is the reading room of the University Center.

Endowed professorial chairs are of great importance to Washington and Lee and a mark of unusual distinction for the teachers who hold them. Dr. Severn P. C. Duvall is the Henry S. Fox, Jr., Professor of English, a chair resulting from a gift made by the Mamie F. Martel Trust; and Dr. Felix P. Welch is the Cincinnati Professor of Mathematics, a chair resulting from gifts from the Society of the Cincinnati in Virginia.

Law students gain invaluable practical courtroom experience through participating in the Burks Moot Court Competition in the School of Law. The program is being assisted by a special endowment established by Wilbur C. Hall, a devoted alumnus of the School of Law and a former student of the late Dean Martin P. Burks, for whom the program is named.

The Letitia Pate Evans Dining Hall was named in memory of Mrs. Arthur Kelly Evans and in recognition of the continuing income that Washington and Lee receives from her charitable trust. Here the dining hall is shown in use at the time of the inauguration of President Robert E. R. Huntley.

THE PARENTS' FUND

Ten thousand dollars over the goal! That's what the Parents' Fund achieved in 1969-70. In the most generous statement of support made by parents in the history of the Parents' Fund, 469 parents helped to close the gap between the educational costs covered by tuition (about half) and those that must be met by other means. Through providing financial support of a tax deductible nature, parents are helping to keep tuition payments within manageable limits.

Thirty-five parents are now Robert E. Lee Associates.

In 1913, the estate of Mr. Robert P. Doremus of New York and gifts from Mrs. Doremus made possible the construction of Doremus Gymnasium. It is said that Mr. Doremus was so impressed by the friendliness of Washington and Lee students when he visited the campus that he was prompted to make the largest single bequest ever received by the University. Doremus Gymnasium is now being renovated and enlarged by adding a wing to the rear. This project is also being financed through gifts.

Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges

Since 1952, hundreds of corporations have responded to the efforts of the VFIC to provide a means of coordinated financial support for twelve independent colleges and universities. These institutions are: Bridgewater College, Emory and Henry College, Hampden-Sydney College, Hollins College, Lynchburg College, Mary Baldwin College, Randolph-Macon College, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Roanoke College, Sweet Briar College, University of Richmond, and Washington and Lee University.

Washington and Lee has benefited greatly from the generosity of business in this manner. In 1952 the University's share of the VFIC's efforts was $2,385. This year, with the Foundation receiving total support of $1,020,352, Washington and Lee's portion was $90,068. In total, Washington and Lee has received $990,750 in contributed funds through the VFIC since 1952.

The 1969-70 year has not been an easy one for business. With that in mind, Washington and Lee is particularly appreciative of this exceptional financial support.

A list of the 906 contributors would be too lengthy for this report. But the University wishes to acknowledge that each contributor, along with the staff of the VFIC, has had an important beneficial effect upon Washington and Lee University this year.

Scholarships have played a central role in the education of youth throughout most of the University's history. In recent years, honor scholarship programs have been of particular importance. Among the most notable of these have been the George F. Baker, Jessie Ball duPont, Robert E. Lee, J. W. Warner, M.D., Scholarships in the undergraduate schools; and the Menkemeller and Peirez Scholarships in the School of Law. Shown here are Joe Tompkins, senior from Vinton, Va., holder of a George F. Baker Scholarship, and Paul D. Wilber, senior from Salisbury, Md., holder of a Robert E. Lee Scholarship.

Corporations

The following list identifies those businesses that matched employees' gifts to either the Alumni Fund or the Parents' Fund during the 1969-70 Annual Giving Year. In this manner, these corporations added $17,970 to the Alumni Fund and $1,822 to the Parents' Fund. This "Matching Gift" program is a highly important element in the University's gift income and represents an enlightened approach by American business in aiding higher education.

Number of companies matching gifts	101
Number of gifts matched	204
Total amount	$19,792

Corporate Support by Direct Grant

Below are listed those corporations that contributed to the University's educational work by direct grant. Numerous opportunities were opened to Washington and Lee because of this corporate support — opportunities that would have otherwise been only good ideas.

Foundations

For years one of the vital parts of the academic community has been the Foundation, whether of the small family variety or a large, general purpose philanthropy. In the past, Washington and Lee has been greatly aided by foundations, a fact no less true in the 1969-70 fiscal year. The total of grants to the University from the following foundations during the period of July 1, 1969, until June 30, 1970, is $132,000, not including the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges whose work is described in the preceding section.

the little man: a forgotten cause

by JOSEPH D. HUGHES

My title is "The Little Man: A Forgotten Cause." My subject is the plight of the independent privately supported colleges, and especially of those small liberal arts colleges of limited resources. My thesis is that the independent colleges are rendering a unique and essential service in American education and that their plight is more dangerously critical than is commonly realized.

There is no need in these times — and certainly not before this audience — to justify the role or the record of higher education in America. Education is capital investment. Indeed, trained and disciplined knowledge is one of the nation's most valuable capital resources. In the words of the philosopher A. N. Whitehead, "In the conditions of modern life, the rule is absolute: the race which does not value trained intelligence is doomed."

We depend on the colleges and universities for educated manpower in every field, including most of our leaders in business and industry. The educators have done a truly remarkable job in carrying added burdens over these past 25 years. They trained 2.2 million veterans of World War II. They reformed their curricula after October 4, 1957, to place more emphasis on mathematics and the sciences. They resisted any inclination they may have had to remain small, selective, and exclusive — the appealing theory of educating "the elite." They expanded their facilities, built a splendid new physical plant, and attracted teachers and administrators to accommodate the tidal wave of students in the 1960's. There are 7.1 million undergraduates on the campuses today — more than three times the number of 20 years ago.

We get some measure of what has happened in higher education in this century when we realize that in 1900 in this country there were few colleges with more than 2,000 undergraduates.

As for the product of today's colleges, the corporate executives I have talked with are unanimous in saying that the young people they are getting have worked harder and are better qualified, better educated, and better motivated than the generations of students that preceded them. It is a sobering thought that if we were 18 again, some of us probably would not be admitted to our college and might not stay the course if we were.

This country committed itself in the nineteenth century to a dual system of higher education — one that provides opportunity for both large scale and small scale education in terms of numbers to be served in given institutions. To the earlier private, independent colleges and universities were added the Land Grant Colleges, the state normal schools, and, a little later, the state universities — a movement called by the teacher-poet Paul Engle "the most massive attempt in the world's history to make higher education available to any qualified young person who wants it." The dual system has served us well for more than a 100 years. Now, under the stress of our times, we re-examine the system as all healthy societies have always re-examined their institutions.

Today the nation's 1,200 private colleges and universities are educating less than one-third of the students enrolled in higher education. That is a considerably smaller proportion than the 50 percent of two decades ago, but it is almost as many students as were enrolled in all colleges in 1952. Many of these colleges, from the largest to the smallest, are operating in the red. Virtually all the major private colleges have been experiencing growing deficits at least since 1966, which now appears to have been the year when the intensified crisis began. Some are transferring funds from their operating reserves to meet their payrolls. Some are borrowing money.

If we were to put the problem in the simplest business terms, we might say that the costs of building, maintaining, and staffing the operation have risen faster than the income it produces. Management has raised prices, but unit cost — the cost per student — is near the point where it will be higher than the price the customers will pay. With a growing deficit in unit cost, the difficulty is compounded by an enormous increase in the number of units. Unlike the factory, the college cannot recover its costs by increasing its output per man-hour worked. Productivity remains relatively constant on the campus.

The problem of rising costs and insufficient income, of course, is common to all institutions of higher learning; but it is especially serious for those that are privately supported, and more serious still for those that are privately supported, small, and not heavily endowed.

In the first place, the independents are competing against a subsidized operation — that of the growing community colleges and the spreading state university complexes. It's pretty hard to market a product at a fair price when somebody across town is giving it away free or far below cost.

The cost gap between the independent and the tax-supported colleges has been widening in these recent years. The independents, of course, can't pass their money problems on to their state or county governments. They may look to the state for assistance, but they have no formal claim and no assurance that assistance will be given. Therefore, they must ask for more and larger grants from foundations, alumni, corporations, and the federal government. Those grants have not been forthcoming in the amount or the manner needed, and 1970 does not look like a good year for an increase. Some observers believe that the economic squeeze already being felt will intensify greatly.

For one thing, the competition for the available private dollars has been increasing, with more people in the act, until we begin to near the point of diminishing returns. The federal government has been cutting back on its funded research programs and is returning high-salaried Ph.D.'s to the teaching ranks. The alumni of the liberal arts colleges are themselves beset by rising costs and new tax laws less favorable to gifts to education. Business has tended to increase the strings it ties to its grants, apparently as a result of dissent and violence on the campus. Foundations are now operating under a federal tax. Foundations and corporations have both undertaken new inner-city improvement programs and related poverty projects.

In the meantime, having toiled themselves up for increased numbers, the independent colleges this past year have seen their enrollments dip — down 1/2 of 1 percent for the first drop in 16 years — although national population in higher education was up almost 13 percent. The problem is compounded by the fact that graduate education — by far the most expensive service a university renders — is largely concentrated in the private institutions.

In a study which Fortune magazine did on 20 selected colleges, this was said:

“By 1973 the 20 colleges will be running a combined annual deficit of $45 million, and probably will have exhausted their reserves, not to say the generosity of their donors. By 1978 their total annual deficit will have risen close to $110 million, or 17 percent of their operating budgets. The 20 have no idea where the money needed to cover deficits of this size will come from.”

The article continued: “The 20 are among the wealthiest colleges in the United States. . . . They are the ones that breathe most easily. What about the others? No one has yet been able to estimate the deficit the whole community of 1,177 private four-year institutions is piling up. The way things are going, the combined annual deficit 10 years from now could be in the neighborhood of five billion dollars.”

And Fortune concludes: “This is obviously impossible. To one degree or another then, the private colleges and universities are faced with the question of survival.”

In recent years a number of independent colleges — especially liberal arts colleges — have become state or “state-related” institutions, among them Houston, Buffalo, Temple, Pittsburgh, Kansas City, Akron, and Wichita. Observers believe that there are likely to be more. In 1967, Dr. Allan Cartter, Chancellor of New York University, declared, “Without a shift in current trends, I would anticipate the absorption into state systems of all but a handful of the strongest private universities. . . . It would not be surprising to find only several score (private liberal-arts colleges) left by 1980 with even a modicum of vitality.”

“The competition for the private dollar has been increasing.”

Time and time again, educators have warned us that the private colleges and universities are in serious trouble. One of my acquaintances — Dr. Edward D. Eddy, Jr., President of Chatham College, one of Fortune's well-endowed 20 — told me bluntly the other day, “Too many of us are subsisting on our fat. This situation is scaring everybody. Something has got to give.” The presidents of seven small colleges said much the same thing before a Congressional panel last February 4. They reported that their institutions and hundreds of others like them were faced with bankruptcy.

Dr. William G. Bowen, Provost at Princeton University and author of the Carnegie Commission report on “The Economics of the Major Private Universities,” allows that college presidents, like football coaches, are expected to talk of grim prospects; but he adds, "Recent statements about the financial difficulties of these institutions have a tone of gravity and a sense of urgency which compel close attention. In the opinion of this writer, the facts fully justify concern."

"We would certainly lose a freedom of choice in higher education."

It is hard to see how we can possibly ignore or seriously discount what the responsible professionals have been telling us so insistently. If we distrust them in their judgment on the plight of our educational system, we certainly should not trust them with the care of our most precious resource. If we do trust them, we should act on their warnings.

What would be the consequences of a major decline in the number and quality of the independent colleges? What would be the effect on higher education? What would America lose? It seems to me that four main points need to be made in answering those questions.

First, we would certainly lose a freedom of choice in higher education — choice of place and surroundings, of curriculums, of special emphasis, of standards, of size of college, of size of its classes. That loss or reduction in freedom of choice can come with disappearance of the college, or its absorption into the state system, or its decline as a quality institution, or with increased tuition that only the well-to-do can pay.

Secondly, we would lose the cross-effect, sometimes synergistic, produced by two different educational organizations working in the same field. Generally the relationship of the two is competitive; sometimes it is cooperative; but either way it very often has creative results beneficial to both parties. The state universities, for example, are strengthened in their relationship to the state boards by the atmosphere of academic freedom maintained by the private colleges. They benefited in the 1950's when the private colleges initiated and led the drive for decent academic salaries. They are emulating the teaching values of the private colleges by establishing small semi-autonomous residential colleges within the larger university.

Each type of institution is stimulated by advances in knowledge and innovation in teaching methods developed by the other. The private colleges are commonly said to hold educational leadership in innovation — a claim that the state universities are inclined to deny with some heat. The fact does remain, however, that the private colleges have greater freedom to experiment and innovate, since they do not have to clear new programs with a state board. As Fortune sees it, "Presidents of state universities themselves are very solicitous of the private colleges, whose higher standards give the presidents something to shoot at, and an extra leverage on statehouse appropriation committees."

Thirdly, it seems clear that an absorption of the private colleges into the state systems would add very substantially to the cost of education, both in terms of tax burden and of the overall national cost. There is a long and well-documented history in this country of vital private services that languished and were replaced or taken over by a tax-supported service — one that was not much different, perhaps no better, but inevitably several times more expensive.

In education, the University of Buffalo is a classic case. Buffalo had a large endowment but its cost per student was high and it needed additional financial support that it could not get. The state took it over in 1962 and was able to find resources that had not been available to Buffalo as a private university. It poured some hundreds of millions of dollars into building a new university — the State University of New York at Buffalo — on a completely new campus. In 1967 the new university was costing the state $45 million in operating support. Dr. Allan Cartter believes that $3 to $4 million probably would have been sufficient to let it prosper as an independent university. "Each new institution taken over by the states," he says, "raises the tax burden by a factor of ten to twenty times the amount that might have been necessary to keep the college as a viable independent institution."

The president of small Bridgewater College in Virginia, Dr. Wayne F. Geisert, has spoken plaintively on this theme. "I wish the taxpayers and state legislators," he says, "could be made to realize that the real bargains for an expanding higher education lie in utilization of the unused capacity in the private educational institutions of our nation. Modest expenditures . . . on state scholarship programs . . . would provide an economical way of allowing students to 'choose their own colleges' and would at the same time allow the states to avoid the temptations to over-expand state educational capacity at great expense to the taxpayers."

I have no wish to become involved in the never-ending debate on the propriety and forms of government aid to private colleges; but I do feel that one point should be made as a warning to those who feel that federal or state funding is a simple and dependable solution to the plight of the private college. Our recent experiences in Pennsylvania are instructive. In February of this year, the State Assembly had not been able to agree on a tax bill for the fiscal year that began July 1, 1969. Appropriations for higher education were delayed for more than seven months, and through that uncertain period the colleges had to draw upon reserves or borrow money to meet their operating expenses. Pitt was reported on January 15 to be paying $4,000 a day and Penn State $5,700 a day in interest on money they had borrowed since last July while waiting for their appropriations to come through. The colleges received their appropriations in March.

The Pennsylvania experience is not typical — not of Pennsylvania which has a good record in supporting our leading institutions. Nevertheless, anyone who has been involved with programs requiring state or federal appropriations — in science, space technology, poverty programs, urban renewal, or whatever — knows that legislators are under various pressures, that government blows hot and cold, and that a feast may very soon become a famine.

Finally, in allowing the independent colleges to decline, we would be compromising the concept on which our dual system of higher education is based. Mass education on the giant state "multiversities" would over-balance quality education in the smaller independent colleges and universities.

Quality education requires emphasis on teaching as the primary mission rather than on research and publication. It means treating the student as an individual. It requires small classes and frequent face-to-face contact with teachers of experience and stature rather than with T.A.'s — Teaching Assistants. These are essential elements of humane learning, of the inculcation of moral values, and of liberating and organizing the human mind through the communication of knowledge. A great many responsible people feel that it is better done in the small and medium-size private colleges and universities — and especially in those that qualify as "centers of excellence" — than in the state universities, which have no control over their size and may be educating 25,000 to 50,000 or more students in classes of 200 to 300.

At a friend's house during Christmas vacation I questioned his daughter about her classes and teachers. She attends a private college, one widely known for its teaching excellence. It has fewer than 700 undergraduates, many of them from out-of-town and out-of-state and some from foreign countries. She told me that she is taught by two full professors, one associate professor, one assistant professor, and an instructor, in classes averaging about twenty students. She sees nothing unusual in this and assumes that instruction on all campuses is like that.

The first casualty of the academic financial crisis is not likely to be the outright disappearance of the independent colleges, but rather something very nearly as serious: reduction of services, a lowering of standards, and a decline in the quality of teaching. Cutback is inevitable in the face of chronic deficits.

Dr. William Bowen discusses the effects of such cutbacks in his economic study. "Institutional morale," he writes, "is a delicate thing, and depends at least as much on the direction in which events are moving as on the state of affairs at any point in time. In the face of the kinds of decisions which would have to accompany any process of retrenchment, it would be very difficult indeed to retain key administrative and faculty personnel and to maintain general morale. . . . Given the mission of a major private university, 'standing still' (let alone leaning backward) simply is not a viable posture, and any institution which is unable to maintain a forward momentum runs a clear risk of losing the support of faculty, prospective students, patrons and friends — and thus exacerbating its problems.”

We must make a further distinction here, I think, among the independent institutions. Some are large, well-endowed, and leaders in their field — in law, or medicine, or engineering, for example. Some others are small but widely known to be centers of excellence. These have a special claim as purveyors of a unique and essential contribution to the public welfare. It is unthinkable that we will abandon such institutions.

What are the solutions to the financial plight of the independent colleges? This is a very big and very involved matter — a subject for another speech. We do know that foundation grants are not the only answer — there is not that much money in the tills of all the foundations.

Support must be increased on all levels. As McGeorge Bundy has been insisting, “the American rich, old and new, must play a much larger role as individual contributors.” There may be some merit in a plan proposed some years ago by the McGraw-Hill Company but never pursued — that American companies pay a flat sum to a college for every one of its graduates they employ. A key question in the whole problem is this: Who is to take the responsibility for finding the means and developing the programs of saving the colleges? The state? The college administrators? The college associations?

Robert K. Greenleaf, retired official of A.T.&T. and a consultant to the Richard King Mellon Foundation, advanced the thesis persuasively at a meeting of concerned college people in January that the responsibility lies with the college trustees. He holds that the level of trust at which the trustees function must be substantially raised. There is no other resource than trustees, he says, that is positioned to act quickly enough and decisively enough to reverse the deteriorating trend in the college's finances. He holds that it is not enough simply to “bail out” these colleges from their current financial dilemma. A new constructive force is needed and he feels that a new trustee interest should provide it. It is a bold concept and certainly one that is worth exploring.

We would do well to note these points:

Our dual system of publicly supported and privately supported education is a valid system.

The independent colleges are performing a good service in training and educating young people to assume responsible positions in our society. It is to the public interest to maintain them.

The values of education represented by the independent liberal arts colleges are sound and should be preserved.

The role of “the little man” in higher education is not little. Within the foreseeable future there will be more than ten million undergraduates on our campuses — independent and public. That figure means problems enough for all.

Surely private philanthropy has the physical and intellectual resources to do what needs to be done to preserve and nourish the quality of our system of higher education.

Mr. Hughes is administrative trustee of the Richard King Mellon Foundation, Pittsburgh, Pa. The article is an adaptation of an address he delivered on April 9, 1970, at the Conference of Southwest Foundations in Dallas. It is reprinted, with permission, from Foundation News, July-August, 1970.

university marks 100th anniversary of lee's death

THIS OCCASION

On September 28, 1870, R. E. Lee, in a characteristic gesture of kindness, signed his name for the last time. He was leaving his office in Lee Chapel when he met a Washington College sophomore who had a picture of Lee, which a girl had asked him to get the General to autograph. The student, seeing that Lee was on his way out, said he would come another time. "No," said Lee, "I will go right back and do it now." About five hours later, the General, whose health had deteriorated markedly since the fall of 1869, was fatally stricken.

He came home from a tedious meeting of the vestry of Grace Episcopal Church, late for the evening meal, damp and chilled from walking in the rain. He took his usual place at the head of the table and tried to say grace. No words came. He sat down quietly in his chair. On his face, Mrs. Lee wrote later, was "a sublime look of resignation." His family went to his assistance. Doctors were quickly summoned. He was placed on a bed which was set up in the dining room. During his whole illness, he never smiled and rarely spoke, except to answer questions in monosyllables. He lingered for two weeks, with hope and despair the twin watchers at his bedside. At first, he seemed to respond to treatment. "You must make haste and get well," the doctor told him. "Traveller has been standing so long in the stable that he needs exercise." Lee slowly shook his head and closed his eyes. When his daughter Agnes urged him to take medicine, he looked at her and said, "It is no use." On October 11, he began to sink, and in his half-delirium "his mind wandered to those dreadful battlefields." He muttered broken words, but at one point said clearly, "Tell Hill he must come up." Then around nine-thirty on the morning of October 12, he spoke his last words: "Strike the tent." Was it that he was again ordering his army forward? Or was it that, for him, the long struggle was over and peace had come at last?

Thus Robert Edward Lee, who had lived a life unflawed by the meanness that inevitably touches the lives of even the best of men, came to his end in his sixty-fourth year. Tolling bells proclaimed the sad news to the citizens of Lexington; the telegraph, to the world. On October 15, Lee was buried in the chapel he had built. Noble in war and peace, he was to continue noble in death.

The faculty of Washington College met the day after Lee's death and declared that "his executive ability, his enlarged views of liberal culture, his extraordinary powers in the government of men, his wonderful influence over the minds of the young, and his steady and earnest devotion to duty, made the College spring, as if by the touch of magic, from its depressions after the war to its present firm condition of permanent and widespread usefulness." The resolution added that the "memory of his noble life will remain as an abiding inspiration to the young of the country as they gather at the last scene of his labors, to emulate his virtues and to follow his great example." The faculty also suggested that a monument be erected on the campus in Lee's memory and expressed the desire "that the name of this institution may hereafter ever express in fit conjunction the immortal names of Washington and Lee, whose lives were so similar in their perfect renown, and with both of whom equally, by singular good fortune, it is entitled to be associated in its future history."

The Board of Trustees, meeting twice on the day of Lee's funeral, concurred in the faculty's resolution. The Board, in its resolution, lauded General Lee's great military service. They resolved that the two most renowned names in their respective centuries were Washington and Lee and that they "be hereafter associated indissolubly as founder and restorer of our beloved College." The Board also declared that the charter should be amended to bring together forever the names of Washington and Lee in the name of the institution. The Trustees ordered that the anniversary of Lee's birth should always be celebrated at the College, and that, with the cooperation of the faculty, measures should be taken and plans prepared for the erection within the College grounds of a suitable monument to Lee.

These pledges of the College were dutifully met. The will of the Trustees, changing the name of Washington College to Washington and Lee University, was officially accomplished on February 5, 1871, by act of the General Assembly of Virginia.

On their 100th anniversary, these events were solemnly commemorated by the University and the United Daughters of the Confederacy in Lee Chapel. During the singing of the final anthem, representatives of the United Daughters of the Confederacy — Mrs. William M. Forrest, Honorary President of the U.D.C., and Mrs. F. B. Fitzgerald, President of the Virginia Division of the U.D.C. — placed memorial wreaths at the Valentine Recumbent Statue of Lee. They were escorted by students and cadets from Washington and Lee University and the Virginia Military Institute.

CENTENNIAL COMMEMORATION

The Principal Remarks
at the Centennial Convocation Commemorating the 100th Anniversary of the Death of Robert E. Lee and of the Change in the Title of Washington College to Washington and Lee University

Noon, October 10, 1970
Lee Chapel
Washington and Lee University

DR. HUSTON ST. CLAIR
Rector of the Board of Trustees

On behalf of the Board of Trustees of Washington and Lee University, whose members join me on this platform, I welcome you to this Lee Chapel, now a National Historic Landmark.

We commemorate today those important events and decisions which occurred here during October a century ago. We come with a tremendous sense of humility and pride that the life and influence of one of history's truly noble figures are so much a part of the heritage and vitality of this University. We gather to acknowledge the enormous legacy bestowed upon this institution by its greatest president, Robert E. Lee.

Death came to General Lee in the President's Home on October 12, 1870. Although a hundred years separate us from that tragic date, our certain knowledge of his character and our full understanding of his accomplishments as president make it easy for us to realize the sorrow and despair that attended his passing. But we remember, too, that among those who mourned Lee, there were men of vision who determined that his name should forever be a part of this institution's title. We acknowledge our debt to the faculty and trustees of 1870, whose official actions in the days following General Lee's death set in motion the creation of Washington and Lee University.

There are many here today whose love and admiration of Robert E. Lee is deep and abiding. We are happy that you are able to participate in this commemorative event. We are especially honored by the presence of General Lee's great-grandson, an alumnus of Washington and Lee University, Robert E. Lee, IV.

Mrs. William M. Forrest, (left) Honorary President of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, and Mrs. F. B. Fitzgerald, President of the Virginia Division of the U.D.C., placed memorial wreaths at Lee's statue. At the right, Robert E. R. Huntley, President of the University, talks with Robert E. Lee, IV, alumnus and great-grandson of General Lee.

DR. DAVID W. SPRUNT
Chaplain of the University

Let us join in prayer.

Eternal God, our Father, as we meet here today we are keenly aware of the educational and spiritual legacy bequeathed to us by many who have walked this campus and who have worshiped in this Chapel. We praise Thee for their continuing influence for good, not only in the present life of the University but in homes, in communities, in enterprises scattered throughout the world. We are especially thankful for the enduring vision of Robert E. Lee, whose practical wisdom chartered the University's course for generations to come, as he transformed a war-shattered college into an influential center of learning for the New South and for the emerging new nation. We thank Thee, too, for his Christian concern manifested in his actions as president — a concern expressed in his intense interests in a spiritual well-being of each student and expressed in his decision to build this Chapel, a symbol of reconciliation, a place of healing for the wounds of his broken and divided country.

Most of all, our Father, we are grateful that once there lived here such a man — a man who thought himself to be only a poor sinner in Thy sight and who opened his heart to Thy grace, a man of unshakable faith in the midst of dire adversity, a man of loving forgiveness in the midst of bitter hatred, a man of confident hope in the midst of bleak despair. As we honor such a life, deliver us from unfounded sentimentality on the one hand and from cynical indifference on the other. Rather grant us an ever-deepening insight into the source of that faith that supported Robert E. Lee throughout his life and made him the man that he was. For we need what he had and we know we need it. So likewise give us a clearer vision of the ways in which this University can respond most effectively to the needs of our troubled people in these days — even as Lee led it in responding to the needs of his fellowmen. All this we ask as so constantly did Lee for Thy name's sake. Amen.

ROBERT E. R. HUNTLEY
President of the University

Robert E. Lee was a soldier without peer. His own troops held him in the kind of esteem and awe which can only be described as worshipful. His adversaries in battle feared and respected him almost as if he possessed superhuman qualities as a military leader and strategist. Yet it is not for this that we meet to pay him homage this day. Lee was one of those exceedingly rare figures in history who did truly become a legend in his own time and in all the hundred years that have passed since his death. His very name evokes a kind of stirring of the blood, a vague unarticulated exultation. Neither is it for this, however, that we meet to pay him homage this day.

Let me relate one simple brief episode in Lee's life which speaks to me more eloquently than a thousand words:

After the war had ended and Lee was in Richmond under indictment for treason, one of his many visitors was a minister who came to express his sympathy and to rail bitterly against the Northern victor. Lee turned the subject aside in his characteristic quiet manner. But later as the minister was leaving, “Doctor,” he said, “there is a good old book which I read and you preach from which says love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you. Do you think your remarks this evening were quite in the spirit of that teaching?” The minister’s answer is not recorded.

It was Lee’s unshakable belief in the ultimate goodness of divine providence, his unalterable devotion to duty, and his profound desire to work for human love and understanding which he brought with him to Lexington in 1865. The College faced utter ruin and poverty, but he was not perplexed. The world around him heaved in distress and hatred, but he was not discouraged. He saw his mission here in the clear terms of the nobility of the educated mind and the compassionate spirit, and he realized fully the superlative importance of his setting the proper example for those who looked for guidance and example. And he succeeded in this — his final and his finest achievement.

This is then the day on which we pause to commemorate the death of Robert E. Lee. It is equally the day on which we commemorate and dedicate the life of his College, which he saved from death and which he set on a course leading into the future unafraid in the midst of fear, hopeful in the face of hopelessness, compassionate in a time of bitterness and hatred. This University, which bears his name linked forever with the name of that man whom he revered above all others, has moved forward through all the decades of change and turmoil which have come and gone. And it will, I pray, through all the decades of change and turmoil yet to come, move with its face forward, proud of its past and eager for its future.

A few days after Lee arrived here to assume the presidency of Washington College he wrote the following lines in a letter to Mrs. Lee, who had not yet joined him in Lexington.

“Life is indeed gliding away,” he said. “And I have nothing good to show for mine that is past. I pray I may be spared to accomplish something for the benefit of mankind and in the honor of God.”

His prayer was answered, the results are all around us, and we are thankful.

President Huntley spoke of General Lee’s leadership and humility in a time when the nation was seething with distress and hatred.

Lee Centennial Year / 1870-1970

*Washington College, Va., December 24, 1869.
Academic exercises will be suspended from the 25th to the 27th inclusive, to enable the students to join in the rites and services appropriate to the occasion, and while enjoying these privileges with grateful hearts, all are urged to do or countenance nothing which may disturb the peace, harmony, and happiness that should pervade a Christian community.*
